A MOUNTAIN GIRL.

Dr. W. G. Frost, President of Berea College, Kentucky, who is in the city at present, gave the following history the other morning, at the residence of Miss Helen Gould, concerning a true daughter of the revolution, the said daughter being one of the pupils at Berea. It is a study, not only in the degeneracy that follows isolation, but in the power of inherited capabilities to respond to a new environment, in the oldest and purest of American stock.

John Gabbard was a bible reading and psalm singing Englishman, who came to America because Cromwell was dead and he would not join the Episcopal church. His son Adam learned to read, write and cipher, and served under Washington. After the revolution, having previously married a Scotch-Irish girl, he settled in a rich river bottom in Western Virginia and raised a family of twelve children. His son David had few school privileges, but learned to read write and cipher. His wedding journey was to a claim 175 miles west of his old home. His wife and he made the trip on horseback, and transportation being difficult, they carried only three books—a Bible, a catechism and a small "Life of Washington."

This more of the family took it into the "dark and bloody ground" of Kentucky, and David, who was a famous fighter, was killed before many years while out with Daniel Boone. His son Daniel never saw a schoolhouse and never learned to read. The land was divided among four children, giving each 200 acres. This family had now lost the art of reading, which it had possessed for three generations. In the next generation it also ceased to own property, which it had possessed for the same length of time. Daniel had sixteen children, none of whom ever thought of learning to read. Their father had been a man of substance, though illiterate, but his 200 acres did not go far among sixteen, and, the rich river valleys now being all taken up, the brood was obliged to scatter out over the stony soil of the Kentucky mountains.

The generation lived and died in entire isolation. Several were killed among mountain feuds. The last of that generation, old Palestine Gabbard, is now running a moonshine still on Hell For Certain creek. But his son Bud got in contact with the world again. In 1861 Bud took a raft of logs down the Kentucky river, and to his astonishment found that a war was in progress. He enjoyed fighting, and enlisted in the Union army. He was disorderly in camp, but made a splendid fighter, and marched with Sherman to the sea. When he went back home he possessed broader ideas than his family had known for two generations. When the free school system was established Bud became school trustee, although unable to read or write. At first he auctioned off the position of teacher to the highest bidder and pocketed the proceeds, a feature of the public school system still obtaining in that section.

But after a while a Berea graduate taught school in an adjoining district. Bud was capable of seeing and partially appreciating the difference. He determined not only to have a better school in his district, but also to educate his daughter Serpeta to teach school. This was a mighty progressive idea for a man like Bud, who could not read any more than his father before him. He determined, nevertheless, to set aside whatever might accrue from a certain lot of hogs that year for Serpeta's education. But that year an epidemic broke out among the swine, and Serpeta's education went over. When Bud did get ready to educate Serpeta the girl's own notions had to be taken into account. She was now fifteen, and several boys were already "talkin' to her right pert."

"Talkin' to her" has a technical meaning in the Kentucky mountains. Serpeta did not know whether she wanted to be educated or not. But just then it happened that a certain teacher from Berea, Mrs. Yocum, making one of those horseback tours among the mountains much affected by Berea teachers, stopped over night in Bud's cabin and talked to Serpeta. That settled it. Serpeta, like her father, had brain cells somewhere in her cranium, created generations before, which responded to Mrs. Yocum's representations. She decided to be educated. When Serpeta came riding up to Berea, in her white sunbonnet and wollen mitts, she dismounted her horse and proceeded to climb the fence square in front of the president's house. True, there was a gate right beside her, but that didn't do Serpeta any good. She didn't know what it was for.

"Don't think too hardly of her ignorance, says Dr. Frost; "I have heard that a large proportion of the school children in Boston, when examined in nature studies, didn't know that milk came from a cow. Environment means a good deal, you know." Serpeta doesn't know she is a "Daughter of the revolution." She is quite unconscious of her pedigree. But this daughter of Bud, the Union veteran, Palestine, the moonshiner; Daniel, the Indian fighter; David, the backwoodsman; Adam, the revolutionary hero; and John, who was Cromwells man, is not only an interesting study, but a joy to her teachers.—New York Tribune.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

With LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

GOOD ROADS.

Advantages of State Aid in Road Iprovement.

When Col. Brownlow of Tennessee introduced a bill in Congress appropriating twenty million dollars as a fund for National aid to road improvement in the United States, a good many people were startled at the size of the figures. The amount, however, seems very small compared with the sum that a single State now proposes to raise and spend. The New York legislature has adopted a constitutional amendment proposing to raise and spend five million dollars annually for ten years, or fifty millions in all. This amendment must pass the legislature again in 1905, and then it will go before the people for ratification or rejection. It can reasonably be expected that the measure will meet with popular favor. The people of New York have given the principle of State aid a thorough trial and the results have been highly satisfactory.

One of the objections most loudly urged against both State and National aid is that it will encourage local communities to neglect the improvement of their roads and depend on the State and the Federal Government to do the work for them. But this objection has proven to be purely imaginary. In no place where State aid has been tried, has such result appeared. On the contrary aid from the State treasury only stimulates local self help. It arouses warm competition among the counties and townships to secure a share of the State aid funds. Instead of setting down and folding their hands as predicted, the local communities are raising a great deal more money under the stimulus of State aid than they did before.

A very important advantage that comes from State aid is intelligent supervision in laying out roads, selecting materials, and in method of construction. This may mean all the difference between success and failure. Every year millions of the peoples' hard-earned dollars are wasted, virtually thrown away, in fruitless attempts to patch up bad roads, to fill mud holes, and to improve the roads with unnecessarily steep grades, all because there is no one in charge with the knowledge, judgement, and authority to do the work as it ought to be done.

What is said of the advantages of State applies all the more forcibly to National aid. Its effect will be farreaching. It will arouse universal activity. "Good Roads" will become the peoples' watchword throughout the length and breadth of the land. A quarter of a century of work under National and State aid should give the United States the best system of roads in the world instead of almost the worst as at present.

It looks now as if National aid is bound to come in the near future. Already the State legislatures of Alabama, Tennessee, Wisconsin, New Mexico, Missouri and Minnesota have put themselves on record in its favor.
