The Similkameen river has risen two or three feet this spring and is still in a disposition to continue swelling. However, owing to the light snow fall during the winter there is no danger of excessive high water this year.

R. A. Thayer, the hustling and well-known automobile dealer of Okanogan, was in town on business Friday last. Indeed, if Mr. Thayer is recorded as being in any town, it is a safe bet that he is there on business, for business seems to be his middle name.

The first real touch of summer weather last week spurred up business houses to get out the store front awnings that have been in retirement for a number of months. Those houses that had to purchase new ones found the awning a very expensive luxury, for the high cost of production, or the high demand of the profiteer, has overlooked nothing in this vale of tears upon which an additional price can be hung.

WANTED, A BOX FACTORY.

There is not a better opening in the state for a box factory than right here in Oroville and the energetic man who steps in to fill the seriously felt want is going to find that he has embarked in a venture that will pay big this year and increase in business and profit from year to year. The cannery alone will consume from 25,000 to 30,000 boxes, and then the orchardists will consume thousands upon thousands of the same kind of packages. It is a factory that supplies a line of necessary goods the demand for which does not end with a single season, but the demand increases with each successive year. If some enterprising individual does not step into the gap and supply the box factory all this trade will be diverted elsewhere, for the boxes must be had, and if they are not furnished by a home manufacturer they must be sought elsewhere.

NEW RULE OF THE ROAD.

On and after July 15th a change is to go into effect as to the "rule of the road" in British Columbia. It is the custom on the other side of the line when two vehicles meet traveling in opposite directions to turn to the left, while it has always been the custom on this side of the line to turn to the right. This conflicting practice has been the cause of many accidents since the auto has come so generally into use and so many people from this side of the line make excursions into British Columbia, and really the only wonder is that more accidents have not occurred when it is considered how natural it is for a driver from the United States to swing to the right when meeting a vehicle, and how natural it is on the other hand, for residents of British Columbia, accustomed to the practice, to swing to the left.

That May Day festival sets a new record in school history in this place and it will keep scholars and teachers going some to equal the exhibition in future years.

Strawberries filtered into the market this week and were quoted at so much a look.

One might offer up invocations of thanksgiving for the good fortune that appears to be in store for Oroville in the immediate future, and after waiting so long for the frequently promised change to take definite form, invocations are the proper means of expressing thanks. Oroville has builded up slowly and at times haltingly and so far has got nowhere particular with the process of building beyond the village class, with some important modern improvements but just now it looks as though the heretofore mincing gait is to be succeeded by a more sprightly step. The town has unusual advantages as to location, and while location is a valuable asset in the making of a prosperous town of goodly size there must be push, confidence and willing contribution behind location. The push and confidence, and contributory willingness may have always existed here to a more or less extent, but the opportunity to use those virtues to advantage has not always been in sight. They are in sight now and promise to continue in sight, leading up to a bigger and let us trust a better Oroville. Glancing at the prospects, incubating and hatched, visualizes a material and important growth for the present year. It is a small community to do a great deal, but a great deal this small community has done recently, and it is prepared to do more as the chances for doing develops. Considering the high cost of everything that enters in to construction, as well as consumption, this would be considered an unfavorable time for forging ahead along lines of industrial growth and private undertakings, but the undertakings are formulating into tangible realities and growth will surely follow. Already two very important additions to the structural features of the town are under way, the new bank building and an immense garage, and this building is such an incentive for emulation that other buildings are in contemplation, both in the nature of business blocks and private residences. Through the hard work and liberal subscriptions of citizens a cannery has been secured. It will be finished and equipped by the first of August. A feed mill is an industry that is to be installed at this place before the fall crops come in. A large frost proof fruit storage warehouse is promised by a firm that is in a position to fulfill a promise. Necessity will force the establishment at this point of a box factory. A second warehouse of large capacity is assured along the railroad right-of-way. These are a few of the more important outstanding improvements for the town this year. Then the development of tributary resources is going to be a strong factor in assisting the forward step of Oroville. The reclamation of the vast section to the northward is going to have a favorable influence. The railroad from the north is so certain that the contract for the construction of the first unit of the line has been let and within a few months a north line will be added to the east and west and south lines extending from Oroville, making this a railroad center. Under the West Okanogan Valley Irrigation system every available acre is being put under intensive cultivation and the vast bulk of that 10,000 acres is in direct touch with Oroville. At our very door is being completed one of the most modern dams and water power plants in the state, that can supply all the energy that may be needed for industrial purposes for years to come. Within sight of town is a magnesium sulphate plant, treating the output of an almost inexhaustable natural deposit only a few miles away, which is employing a large force and may develop into something more important than the mere gathering and shipping of Epsom salts. Close at hand are mining enterprises that have at last been placed upon an honest-to-goodness basis of development and are producing ores of high values. These mines are going to aid promenently in the future growth of the town as mining has stimulated city building wherever successful mining has been carried on. Look over the hand as presented. It is made up of all court cards without a single dues in it. With that hand to back Oroville the town cannot fail to push to the front.

The class motto of the graduating class this year is "The Elevator to Success is not Running, take the Stairs." It is timely and to the point. There is no primrose path leading to success, nor has there ever been. The motto is especially applicable in this day of crazy ideas that are being promulgated by visionaries who preach that success, happiness and content can only be reached through legislation, or the medium of replacing a beneficient system of government where everybody of ordinary intelligence has an equal show in this battle of life with a chaotic paternally formed system which is impracticable so long as human nature undergoes no radical change, and which would never get the individual member of society anywhere. Success does not come to any man or woman who sits down and waits, who is obsessed with the idea that the world owes them a living, or who expects to benefit by taking from those who have and distributing the goods and chattels among those who have not, nor who have not the initiative, the energy the industry to make a mark for themselves. There are no smoothe running, ball bearing elevators to shoot the individual upward into the clouds that he may seize the rainbow of success. If he has it in him to win the advancement that is open to every one who tries he must take the stairs and mount gradually step by step to the goal. Opportunity is here today, as it always has been, to the man willing to make an effort, who is ready for temporary self-sacrifice, who has the pep, the perserverence, the pugnacity to face the world and buckle in to overcome all obstacles. In this day and age too many young men are led to waste their time and energy chasing after trivial pleasures, that in the end are but ashes and wormwood, and then blame everybody and everything instead of placing the blame where it belongs, upon themselves, because they are derelicts and failures. If the same intensity of application had been devoted toward getting ahead in the world accomplishment would have award their efforts and there would be no place for the grouch that is superinduced by a wasted life. The motto of the graduates has the right ring. May the graduates, and all other young people for that matter, take it to heart and demonstrate by its application that the maxim leads to a prosperous issue.

For weeks the daily press has been filled with particulars of the career of that gay Lothario, James P. Watson, also possessor of a long string of aliases who is under arrest at Los Angeles for murder, bigamy and a few other delectable errors of commission and omission. It is alleged that during his hectic career in the matrimonial field he married at least twenty-nine women. He has confessed to having relieved himself of the burden of a wife by murdering several of them, his favorite method of reducing his matrimonial liabilities being by the comfortable medium of drowning. In the kindness of heart he selected that means as being the least painful to his victims. Owing to the number that he has thus put aside Mr. Watson's memory is somewhat treacherous and he is foggy as to the exact figures. The authorities are inclined to believe that the list is much longer than the roster he has so far made up. This country has never before produced such a cold-blooded beast and his criminal record is without parallel since the days of Bluebeard. One thing that strikes many of us older birds that had a hard time getting one wife and keeping her after getting, is that there must be a devil of a lot of susceptible and docile women in the world nowadays.

The exotic revolution is ever ready to burst into flower on the fertile soil of Mexico and it is rather a cold day when trouble is not brewing for the leaders temporarily in power over there. Revolt against the Carranza regime is the latest development, and it looks as though Mr. Carranza would shortly be in the discard. For years and years, now Mexico has been torn asunder by internal discord, and that discord promises to continue for everlasting. Had not the present administration butted into Mexican affairs, thus stirring up the spark of revolution, today there might have been some semblance of order in that unhappy country, unhappy in the ambition of would-be leaders, and yet happily provided by nature with the richest resources to be found in the same extent of territory under the sun. If these revolutions are to be pyramided for time without end there will have to be eventually either mediation or intervention on the part of the United States, or a league of nations, in order to bring order out of chaos. Mexico is unsafe for foreigners at present, and for that matter the native population does not appear to have a place to lay their heads in safety.

The socialists in convention assembled at New York are running true to form. They have nominated Debs, who is serving a ten year's sentence for disloyalty, as their candidate for president. By nominating Debs these socialists serve notice that they endorse Debs' attitude as a disloyal citizen and must be placed in the same catagory. Let it be said on behalf of many members of that political organization that thousands that before the war expressed sympathy with socialistic doctrines stood true to their country after the declaration of war. It will be difficult for these men to accept the position taken by the extreme radical wing of the party, and it is the radical wing that dominates the convention in session this week.

Carranza has been eliminated as a leader in Mexico. Villa has surrendered and retired to the privacy of ranch life, and now if too many ambitious candidates for president of our neighboring nation do not try to fight their way into power there is a glimmering posibility that peace will soon reign across the border for a little time at least.
