Protecting Citizenship.

From the Pioneer Press.

The bill of Senator Saulsbury in modification of the existing law of naturalization, points toward a reform which is almost universally desired. There is no reason in the world why the United States should not throw around the most precious and momentous privilege that it can grant, the right to participate in government, stronger safeguards than have ever yet existed. Recent occurrences have intended to call public attention sharply to the dangers of entrusting this highly privilege to men but yet acquainted with or attached to the institutions which are fundamental to liberty. It is safe to say that [illegible]

It is not to be expected that it will become a law at this session or without opposition. But it will serve to open an educating public discussion, and to formulate a principle which, in this shape or some other, is very sure to be adopted.

If the republican party is true to the traditions of its youth it will enter into this work with the enthusiasm, energy and ability it displayed during those [illegible] years of its life when it was making that history it now professes to be so proud of.
