THE EXPOSITION AT PIMLICO.— We have read with much interest the proceedings of the representatives of the Maryland State Agricultural and Mechanical Association in reference to an Exposition on a large scale of trades and occupations to take place September 9th to 14th inclusive.

We believe such an exposition might be made both successful and useful, if certain clearly defined principles are recognized in its conduct, and we will give a few of our thoughts in this connection.

Pimlico is an accessible point and no special objection should be made as to the distance from Baltimore. In the absence of a better and more permanent exposition building in the very outskirts of the city, Pimlico should be looked upon as the proper locality.

Those who have charge of the Association at present are fully competent to carry forward such an enterprise to the very best advantage. We are glad to see such names at the head of this movement, and also to know that representative farmers from various parts of the State have taken part in the deliberations.

It is natural to suppose that the very wisest plans have been adopted, although from the published accounts of the meetings and plans we do not get a full and true view of what we should consider the principles for such an exposition.

1. The length of time is too brief to warrant extensive and permanent displays of goods. The best results are between these brief exhibits and the lengthy ones which have sometimes extended beyond their climax of interest. About three weeks would seem to be the best length of time; where the results have been the most profitable in all parts of the country.

2. The next item is that the true principle of such exhibits is not to have any one thing overshadow the others and thus attract a very good share of the attention to the exclusion of the others. This has been the cause of failure very often, when those interested could not imagine the reason. The great prominence given to the races is at the expense of success in the other department and has generally been the bete noir at Pimlico. To sacrifice all interest to this has not satisfied in the past and in the future will not satisfy the vast body of exhibitors, and accordingly they do not feel anxious to take their goods to Pimlico. Putting all dependence upon the races, is like farmers putting all their dependence upon one crop. Mixed farming is preferable.

3. The third suggestion is that the true principle consists in being guided by the lessons given by the past, avoiding the mistakes of the past, learning the wishes of the best exhibitors of the past, and modifying pet projects in harmony with the desires of the great majority who actually exhibit and have thus a financial interest to subserve.

4. We do not believe in what a correspondent in our last issue has called "dead affairs." The exposition should be alive in the sense that agricultural implements should be in operation; teams should be put to trial in various ways besides racing, though racing be included; fast walking of teams should be encouraged by premiums; the best methods of grooming horses and cattle should be exhibited with premiums attached; in fact hundreds of operations in farm life and trade life should be exhibited making a live fair instead of a dead one.

But we are not now called upon to make further note on this subject. We think the project an excellent one and give it our "good speed," hoping that it projects may have the active co-operation of enterprising men and women in all parts of our State.— Maryland Farmer.
