TALKED OF TEMPLES.

Dr. Smith's Interesting Dissertation on Westminster Abbey.

Rev. Dr. S. G. Smith delivered his lecture on Westminster abbey for the first time to a large and attentive audience at the People's church last evening. Dr. Smith is so well known to St. Paul people as an entertaining and instructive lecturer that any introduction from him to his audience is unnecessary. However, the brief remarks of Locke Richardson, the reader, as a prelude to Dr. Smith's lecture, were very timely and welcome. Dr. Smith's talk is not, strictly speaking, a lecture on Westminster abbey. His introduction is a very excellent philosophical discussion of temple building and the religion of a people as embodied in the various forms of architecture. To cathedral building the lecturer devoted a great deal of his time and presented a number of interesting views not only of Westminster abbey, but of cathedrals all over England. With each structure Dr. Smith related some important historical event, or a curious legend, which added materially to the interest of the lecture. Westminster was considered at length, both historically and artistically, and pictures of its exterior and of famous portions of its interior shown on the screen. The lecture is an unusually interesting one, and free from statistical details. Dr. Smith has evidently given his subject a great deal of study, and presents it in a popular and interesting way.

Boston Globe Editorially Says:

"The American stage grows rich every year in original character creations, like Col. Sellers, Bardwell Slote, Josh Whitcomb, Deacon Tidd, The Senator, Hon. Maverick Brander. To this list of original creations, the offspring of our own composite national life, must now be added Yon Yonson, who is being received with delighted audiences at the Boston Theater this week. Yon is a thoroughly quaint and entertaining personage, and not to see him is to miss a great evening's fun."

HAVING PROCURED THE SERVices of an expert in crown and bridgework, I will hereafter make this brauch of operating a specialty in addition to my new method for filling teeth without pain. No nerves destroyed, no bands or crowns used for the front teeth—hence no appearance of gold, and absolutely no pain in the manipulation. Parties who desire bridge work will please call and inspect the latest improvement in dentistry. C. E. Hale, D. D. S., Litt's Grand Opera House Block.
