MUSIC AND KILLING FEATURES OF WARS

A strange anomaly of war is that music is as important as the death dealing machinery. "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" would never have arrived had not the "thin, red line of Tommies" been called to war. Our own Spanish-American war was given nerve by "It's a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." "The Girl I Left Behind Me" was the music that cheered the boys of '61 to the front. Every other war has been characterized by music, from the barbaric cadences that attended Attila's sweep from the north to the harpers of David who attended the early day battles of the Israelites.

Perhaps music is one bright spot in all the blackness. So cosmopolitan is music that it fits every nation and temperament. No matter how the nations rage, slay and maim, nothing is able to destroy the harmony of a rhythm or the harmony of sounds. Music is a live part of the nations progress. As long as a song dramatically lilts across trenches in which men crouch to kill the warlike better impulse is not dead. It is just temporarily paralyzed and will break forth again with the heart-free song of the lark at morning.—Wichita Beacon.

THE RAZOR EDGE ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Human rights have been developed to such a point that, in the twentieth century, being rich is almost as serious a problem as being poor.

Probably the most wretched man in the world is our richest man.

The poor would be fairer with this rich man's efforts to do great good did they not so earnestly wish to be as rich as he is.

Envy of the rich does not disturb me. It should not disturb anyone so it seems to. Disturb at least 81 out of every 100.—E. W. Howe.

If husbands knew the men their wives say about them, or what their books, they would die of mortification.
