HEALTH

(Written for The Christian Science Monitor)

The world today owes a tremendous debt of gratitude to Christian Science for having made spiritual healing a fact of everyday experience. And every case which, through its belief, that healing, is brought back to health is a tribute paid to the inspired handiwork of the founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy. Although nearly fifty years have passed since her wonderful discovery, and although we are still as children in the knowledge of this science, yet even now, because of the healing it has accomplished, we are assured that humanity has within easy reach the means whereby it may be relieved of all its diseases and purified from all its sins, as well as saved from all its fears. It is literally the case that hundreds of thousands of persons have been restored to health through Christian Science, and that all manner of diseases without exception has yielded to Christian Science treatment.

On page 126 of the textbook of Christian Science "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy makes a statement which has staggered material systems of healing and caused them to seriously look to such themselves. She writes: "Health is not a condition of matter but of Mind, nor can the material senses bear reliable testimony on the subject of health." It will be noticed that this is about as different from the generally accepted views concerning health as it is possible to be. Is it not the case that the vast majority of people believe that health is almost entirely at the mercy of bodily conditions, that they reject good health when the non-intelligent body reports to them that it is acting functionally in a harmonious manner and that her business bodily activity is not healthy, marked except under these conditions? Is material and almost universal belief the influence of food and drinks and drugs and material surroundings? The answer is, of course, emphatically that so far as human health is concerned man is so entirely the slave of material belief as to be actually in the power of the mortality of death. Christian Science gives the lie direct to this material belief and contends that health is a mental condition or quality which is constructed by matter but is built up by the divine Mind. Health is something to be earned and known in much the same way as we are to know any phase of truth. We think "health" as we think the truth about numbers, as for example that twice four equals eight, or as we know the properties of the triangle or geometry has revealed them.

Being this materialist view about the relation of mind to matter, no matter what the danger may be in the individual it is universally expressed in terms of mental helplessness. Broken bones and lacerated tissues the day and thereafter as feels, which such as far as the nations around it is concerned are perfectly in order. The individuals involved are not necessarily to be blamed for feeling the body have control over their minds, or as we put it, as we say, it does so in the general to package for the time being to some a fact whereby it is quite plain the fact is recognized by his other fellows.

Now this method of treatment is absolutely antithetical to that of Christian Science treatment. Through it of spiritual healing follows naturally from knowledge of God and of the rest of spiritual man which Christian Science has brought to light. Briefly summarized this knowledge is as follows: God is Mind, infinite and perfect. He, being infinite, alone has real being or existence, being perfect. He is all harmonious, being Mind. His universe is one of ideas, and man, because he is part of His universe, is an idea in God's Mind. Since like produces like, all God's ideas reflect divine nature; hence man reflects or knows the harmony of the divine Mind; that is, he knows health. Matter is unknown to the infinite Mind. It is a relative sense of existence and therefore a false appreciation of the reality. In Christian Science healing takes place as man's spiritual consciousness is regained. As the spiritual facts of his being are learned, these displace diseased beliefs, and his body, which is but a sense of material concepts which limited mentality has organized to suit its passing day, is relieved and "healed." It is thus purely a question of a knowledge of truth correcting false belief.

The query naturally arises: How can true knowledge be best obtained so as to realize the greatest measure of health? Everyone desires good health, even if but to enjoy existence, to say nothing of being of service to the world. If we understand what conduces to sickness, we shall know how best to promote health and to sustain it. On page 411 of Science and Health are the words: "The productive cause and foundation of all sickness is fear, ignorance, or sin." It is clear that these three mortals must be tackled and destroyed to insure the removal of the evil effect they produce. Fear and sin are often due to ignorance. In the matter under consideration this is emphatically true. Let men learn about God, let them perceive that He is good, that He is Truth and Life and Love, and that correspondingly evil is not a power, but merely a conference for a peaceful, happy existence without worry or care, and the obstacles will be overcome and the standard of true health and the emergence of the world today are purchased at a great cost, because of the ignorance of God as the creator, and the consequent belief in the supposition given at the outset, a supposition upon which the whole structure has its basis in the belief of the reality of matter. As one considers the reality of spiritual sense, material sense loses its hold and sin becomes relieved in proportion thereto. This healing is a process of elimination, as it were, of the elongating from the human mind of mortal beliefs.

But, it may be urged, are not the most saintly persons often grievously afflicted with ill health? True, but these saintly persons are saintly only about certain lines. It is quite obvious that there is a lot left, and that the lines that touch which are not believers of God and the good man. If we are to obtain complete control of our mortal selves we should always, and therefore also when sickness has overtaken the body, find it giving our attention to a close analysis of our mental selves. In doing so we shall remove the sickness of that sense, beliefs and of those forms in mortal consciousness, thus bringing about the healing before of physical ills and with the same number.

Mortals should the harmonies of health, only as they forsake discord, acknowledge the supremacy of divine Mind, and abandon their material beliefs. (Science and Health, p. 411)

Was Traded for a Cheap Horse

A woman who once was traded to a marshal of North Springfield for a horse worth $15 died this week. She was Mrs. Ida Baker, 41 years old, and she was Springfield's woman of mystery. William Bishop, former police chief, remembers a great many sensational episodes in her career. Mrs. Baker came from a wealthy Cincinnati family, was graduated from one of the leading girl seminaries in the East and went under an assumed name following some tragedy in her life. Her second husband was murdered by negro highwaymen in 1906, and the tragedy precipitated the lynching of three negroes there the following day. She never revealed her true identity.

Then They Fumigated the Room

Mrs. Parvenu—John, that Mrs. Kawler, who was just here, said she had been having a bad attack of ongwee. What's that?

Parvenu—Something catchin' perhaps. Why don't you look it up in the dictionary?

Mrs. P.—I did. I went through all the O's, but can't find no such word.

As Told by Ed Chandlee

Nervous guest (asked to sit next to his hostess and opposite the goose)—Am I to sit so close to the goose? (Suddenly feeling this may be misunderstood) Er—I mean the roast one.

Out of the Mouths of Babes

"Sweetness," untied "ma'am," a small boy called out to the stout woman who moved majestically up the street. "I'll tie it for you."

Even a haughtier woman would have found it difficult to treat with disdain so kind an offer, and she drew back her skirt in acceptance of it.

The little boy pulled the string tight and smiled up at her. "My mom's fat, too," he explained.

Paddy Doigh bought a watch from a P. Rubbodder with a guarantee to keep it in order. Paddy took it back because it had stopped.

"You seem to have had an accident with it," said the jeweler.

"A small one, sure enough, sir. About two months ago I was feeding the pig and it fell into the trough."

"But you should have brought it before."

"Sure, me man, I brought it as soon as I could. We only killed the pig yesterday."

EVADED CAPTURE BY BRITISH

Quick Wit of American Patriot Saved Himself and Family When in Dire Peril

There is an incident in the life of George Read worthy of mention in connection with those men who were martyrs to the Declaration. Forty rarely Read suffered actual privation at the hands of the British, a fact she however, solely in the presence of men. When President Hetherington, being officer of Delaware commonwealth, was made a prisoner, even at for the period of Hetherington, it was necessary for George Read to take charge for the time being vice-president of that county. He was in Philadelphia at the time of the proceedings and he could hardly expected considerable delay.

The river between the west bank of the Delaware and the Jersey shore was the site of crossing the river and slide if possible, the vigilance of the enemy's ships which were strung along the whole distance. The 17th of October, 1777, Mr. Read reached Salem, N. J., where he obtained a boat for the purpose of conveying himself and family across the river.

At the place where he undertook the crossing, the river was about five miles wide. Almost in view of the British ships he had about reached the Delaware coast when he was discovered, for his boat had grounded just too far from shore to make it practicable to land his family. Unable to go on or leave the boat they were forced to wait while a ship's boat came up to them. Mr. Read's wits had not been idle, however, and he devised a plan which he and his wife immediately put into practice. They destroyed all traces of identification of their baggage, a feat made possible by the time required for the other boat's approach.

When the boat came alongside he politely informed them of his plight, and added that he was a country gentleman returning home from a pleasure excursion he had made with his family. The presence of his mother, wife and children added weight to this story. The commander of the English boat was only a coxswain, his companions common sailors. There was nothing suspicious about the party.

So, taking pity upon a family thus stranded but a short distance from their destination, the English boat's crew obligingly assisted them to land, helped to get the baggage on shore and, after receiving thanks for their kind assistance, returned to their ship. Mr. Read continued his journey, the end of which was the colony's governmental headquarters, where he assumed the role of chief executive until the release of the president was secured.
