A HANDSOME APPLE.

An All Round Commercial Variety. Dark Red Fruit.

Black Ben has won its place on merit as a splendid apple for commercial purposes. It is far better than Ben Davis and superior to Gano, which it resembles. It was found as a seedling growing in a fence corner in Kansas and has been fruited in practically all parts of the fruit growing districts in the United States and Canada. It is a handsome dark red fruit. The word "black," however, does not refer to color, but to Rev. Alexander Black, on whose farm the seedling was discovered. The tree is an upright, strong and thrifty grower.—New England Homestead.

BLACK BEN.

LINSEED MEAL.

A Safe and Reliable Feed Rich In Digestible Protein.

At present this seems to be the cheapest protein concentrate on the market. Our corn crop is large, and we propose to convert as much as possible into dairy and meat products, and to do so economically we must use with it some feed that is rich in protein. Linseed meal fills this want, and it does much more. Corn, though one of our best feeds, is very heating and fattening and frequently, if fed in large quantities, produces a slightly feverish condition followed by a temporary loss of appetite, constipation and a rough coat. Where silage or roots are fed these troubles rarely occur, but the man who depends entirely on dry feed for the winter should feed some linseed meal regularly if only for its medicinal effects. Half a pound a day to each horse will surprise you if you never tried it. A handful or two for each hog will increase the pork profits. The dairy cow may be fed, according to the milk she gives and the other feeds she gets, from one to four pounds per day. The growing stock should have some as regularly as you give them their salt, which is, of course, every day. There is very little difference between the old and new process meal. The new process usually carries a little higher per cent of protein, but then the protein is not quite as digestible. The protein content should be guaranteed on each bag and should not fall below 32 per cent for a good article. A low protein content often means adulteration or meal from a poor quality seed. A good pure article may analyze above 38 per cent protein, but 32 to 35 per cent is the usual range.—Lighty in National Stockman and Farmer.

When Not to Plow In the Fall.

If you have a soil that has been farmed—no, I mean abused—until all the fiber or vegetable matter has been removed and the sod is poor, so there is nothing to hold it when a little water flows over it, or if the slope is great, it is best to let it lie solid. There are some varieties of clay that run together and become very compact, but nearly all of those can be corrected by the addition of a good supply of vegetable matter, as a heavy coat of manure on a rousing clover sod. Theorists have discouraged fall plowing, and wisely so in some places, but the farmer with good judgment who is right on the spot can generally tell better what is best for him than can the fellow with an unproved theory.—National Stockman and Farmer.

Germs In the Dairy.

The conditions most suited to their growth are food, warmth and moisture. Milk furnishes the required food for their growth. Bacteria are especially numerous in and around a dairy and get into the milk in many ways. Thousands of them are concealed in crevices that can barely be seen, and if they come in contact with milk they will increase many thousand fold within a short time and set up bad fermentations, which are familiar to all dairymen.—Kansas Experiment Station.

Nothing Better Than "Page's Perfected Poultry Food."

D. J. Lambert of Apponaug, R. I., the maker of the famous "Death to Lice" remedies and who is all over the country known as a poultry expert, says there is nothing better than "Page's Perfected Poultry Food." Here are his exact words: "Rations should vary with the different seasons. Some kind of animal food is necessary at all times, and I have found nothing better or handier than 'Page's Perfected Poultry Food.'"

Any one sending his address on a postal card to C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vt., and mentioning this paper, will receive by mail, free, postpaid, a sample package of "Page's Perfected Poultry Food."

Heavy Horses.

Heavy horses are more profitable each year in spite of the gasoline engine and the more common use of steam. Well bred heavy horses, serviceably sound and well broken, sell readily for from $150 to $200. Farmers hesitate to buy light horses for farm use, and after one has had experience with a good heavy team he will never go back to light horses for farm work, no matter how much heavy stock costs. Horses weighing 1,300 to 1,600 pounds are of inestimable value on any farm. Here is a suggestion for farmers who can raise a few colts each year: Raise none but the best. See that they are heavy horses of the popular breed in your own community. In many places Percherons are favorites, while in a few sections Shires and Clydes are wanted. In many places Belgians and Suffolks are becoming popular. These latter are compact, very heavy and are giving a good account of themselves wherever introduced.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Apples For Pigs.

Refuse apples of all kinds have been fed to pigs in large quantities. They are not particularly valuable as a feed for fattening pigs, but seem to do very well along with a quantity of meal for dry brood sows.

How to Make a Magazine.

The truth is that the magazine editors ought to be kept fresh all the time. They should be sent about the country and over the world at frequent intervals. They should marry often in order to get constant new jolts in the marrimonial line. They should belong to all the churches and on occasions be heretics. And every few years they should be taken out and drowned.—Life.

This Time The Waiter Gave The Tip.

William C. Whitney, Jr., who has spent a year in Indian Territory learning practical mining at Quapaw, described at a dinner party in New York a Quapaw restaurant.

"One evening at the restaurant," he said, "two miners near me got into a botanical argument about the pineapple, one claiming that it was a fruit and the other that it was a vegetable. In the midst of their argument the waiter entered in his shirt sueeves and looked about to see what was the cause of the loud talking.

"The miners decided to let the waiter settle their argument, and accordingly one of them said:

"Pete, what is a pineapple? Is it a fruit or a vegetable?"

"Neither, gents," he said: "It's an extra."—Boston Herald.
