(Copyright, by Louis Joseph Vance.)

CHAPTER III.

A Point of Interrogation.

[illegible] Lanyard strained [illegible] of the conversa[illegible] to appear so interest[illegible] of which that filled [illegible] however, the gath[illegible] not still at fourth [illegible] party of [illegible] requesting a more de[illegible] and Roddy pulling a ex[illegible] of enjoyment [illegible] him of the [illegible] and slowly empty[illegible] of [illegible]

[illegible] the talk be[illegible] and the Amari[illegible] politely.

[illegible] overpaid by Lan[illegible] (likely) American [illegible] and a consolation [illegible]

[illegible] he murmured. [illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] he amended, "if [illegible] be."

[illegible] something which [illegible] a severe [illegible] asked the French [illegible] in the other's accents. [illegible] voice [illegible]

[illegible] Lanyard [illegible] to leaving the house [illegible] and [illegible] of a young and pretty [illegible] on the third day [illegible]

[illegible] the room with the [illegible] "La Boule Fraiche" [illegible] spoiled "Cambric."

"To be sure!" laughed the French[illegible] "Now [illegible] it will be time be[illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] in the other's accents. [illegible] voice [illegible] the [illegible] "Ah, [illegible] Lanyard [illegible] to [illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] Lanyard [illegible] in the place [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] Lanyard [illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] Lanyard [illegible] Mr Marbihan [illegible] Lanyard