DEATH'S HARVEST!

Details of the Terrible White Oaks Mine Disaster.

Twelve Men Were in the Mine, Eight of Whom Perished.

Sketch of the Men Who Lost Their Lives in the Burning Shaft.

THE DEAD LAID TO REST

White Oaks Eagle.

The town was startled at 4 o'clock on Saturday morning by the blowing of whistles and firing of guns. People who were awakened by the alarm saw from their windows the red glare of fire reflected upon the sky and the flaxen mountain. It was at once known that the old Abe mine or mill was the scene of the conflagration.

Scores of men and boys were rushing up the hill to the mine a mile away. Before they reached the scene, however, the shaft house, a large and substantial structure, together with the wood and earth shaft, were a mass of cinders and the flames were shooting skyward from the shaft.

[illegible] men were in the mine at the time the fire broke out, of whom Tom, George Wilkerson, Coke Keith, Mike Gallagher and Anton Hegar had escaped through the air shaft by prompt and vigorous action, the alarm being received with not a moment to spare. But Frank Wilson, W. J. Williams, Charles Sherrick, John Davis, George Baxter, Frank White, Jerry Conover and W. B. Mitchell were left below and their fate was unknown. There were those who hoped that the men below had found safety in some chamber where they had walled themselves in against the smoke and gases, and were alive if the air was not all exhausted. The presence of a current down the air shaft strengthened this hope somewhat, and it was further supported by the knowledge that both Sherrick and Williams were old in mining experiences, had gone through many of the dangers of their vocation, and were well acquainted with the mine. The opinion of miners generally, however, was from the first that there was no ground for hope.

As soon as possible after the building was reduced to ruins water was turned into the shaft and the fire was promptly gotten under control. During the day the fire was completely extinguished, but it was impossible to get below the second level on either shaft on account of the smoke and vapors that hung in the workings. The men worked heroically under disadvantages and it was nearly daylight Sunday morning before a pipe was connected from the surface to the thirteenth level. Both the Lady Godiva and North Homestake air compressors were coupled on to this and worked at high pressure, and by 10 o'clock the third level was reached.

[illegible]

Here the first ghastly discovery was made. At the landing of the man way lay the blackened bodies of Jerry Conover and Frank Wilson. The former had apparently been in advance and had fallen back from the ladder leading to the level above, while Wilson's strength failed when he had dragged himself partially over Conover's body and he sank down to die.

At the foot of the first ladder below lay the body of W. J. Williams who had dropped from it while nearing the landing on the third.

All these were probably overcome by smoke while making a brave struggle for life.

The first body, that of Wilson, was raised at 10:15, and the other two soon after. The next hour was spent in the search for other bodies.

The next found were those of Charles Sherrick, George Baxter and John Davis, who had endeavored to pass up through the stope worked out between the fourth and third levels. Sherrick had evidently been overcome at the foot of the stope, on the fourth level where all were found, while the others had climbed up part way and fallen, as their positions and cuts and bruises on their faces indicated.

By noon the six bodies had been taken out and conveyed to Slack's undertaking rooms.

The levels below were explored as far as the men could go in search of the bodies of Mitchell and White, but after searching the seventh the conclusion was reached that they had not received the alarm and would be found where they were at work on the twelfth, or that they had been driven down to the thirteenth or fourteenth. The search was then abandoned until 8 o'clock Monday morning, when the thirteenth was reached.

The first surmise proved to be correct. Mitchell was found lying on the tramway a few paces from the stope in which he had been at work, face downward and his head toward the shaft 350 feet away. He had his candle in one hand and his hat in the other, as if he had been fanning himself when he fell. He had probably noticed the exhaustion of oxygen through the fierce draft of the flames above and had started for the shaft to learn the cause when overcome. White was sitting on a timber in the stope with his hammer in his lap.

THE LAST SAD RITES.

The bodies were all neatly and tastefully prepared for burial by J. B. Slack and M. H. Koch, who embalmed them. Bouquets of natural flowers adorned each quiet breast, and all were enclosed in handsome caskets of uniform style.

It was a scene such as the peaceful mountains encircling the town had never looked down upon before when at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon White Oaks en masse assembled at the Congregational church to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of them who so few days before were with and of the living, filled with the same hopes, aspirations or oppressed with the same sorrows and cares as they who survive now all past.

The strongest man might not look unmoved on those eight caskets before the altar, each holding what had been a strong man. The sorrow depicted on every countenance in the crowd thing was of the melted heart.

After the impressive services at the church the march to the K. P. cemetery began, the procession led by Baxter lodge Knights of Pythias, of which order Sherrick was a member, and visiting brethren.

Seven of the graves were side by side. That of Sherrick was separate. While at the grave a telegram was received from the latter's relatives at Holden, Missouri, directing that his body be shipped to that place, which has since been done.

WHAT WAS THE CAUSE.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, and will no doubt remain so. It appeared to burst out of the change room, but most probably originated in the store room adjoining, which was perfectly close and was kept securely locked, and where the fire may have smouldered for hours till the room was filled with inflammable gas which exploded with the subtlety of powder, though it is claimed that there was nothing in itself explosive in the room. George Wilkerson had come from the change room a minute before the discovery of the fire and was going down to the bucket when it was made. He had reached the ninth level when Jas. Weaver was driven from the hoist by the heat and Wilkerson went down 200 feet to thirteen, where the bucket struck, turned over and shot him into the drift. Almost miraculously, he was not hurt. Looking up the shaft he saw the fire and at once started up the ladder, giving the alarm as he ascended. He was among the first of the four to escape, having climbed to the second level.

This is the first serious accident the Old Abe has ever had. The mine has been carefully and conservatively operated, and no blame can be attached to the management so far as can be inferred from what is known. All the resident members of the company were tireless in their efforts until the ordeal was over and the dead were laid away. It was simply one of those deplorable calamities whose prevention is beyond human foresight.

THE DEAD.

John Davis had been in the camp about two years, coming here from another part of the territory, in which he has worked for many years. He leaves a wife and one son. Mrs. Davis was completely prostrated by the shock and for a time it was feared that her strength would not be equal to the terrible ordeal.

George Baxter leaves a wife but no children. She broke down at the first news and during the season of suspense and realization of the worst her anguish was most touching, and for a time it was thought her life was in danger as with every exertion she fainted away. They had come here but a short time ago from Kingston. He was formerly a railroad man.

Frank Wilson leaves a grief-stricken wife and one daughter. He has lived in the camp for ten years, and had much connection with the Wells Fargo driver the Las Vegas Optic refers to as being suspected of a $[illegible] express robbery years ago. That journal's imputation was recalled for in this connection and is urged to his memory. The man referred to was in this camp once, it is said, years ago.

Charles Sherrick had been in the employ of the Old Abe for three years, and at the time of his death was in charge of the night force in the mine. He was a man universally respected and a good and reliable miner. He leaves sisters and other relatives in Colorado, where he had lived since Cayleset before coming here.

W. J. Williams was a native of Cornwall, England, and had worked in the mines of his native Islematy years before coming to Colorado some twenty years ago. He had been here five years. "Billy" was a most genial and companionable man and generally well-known and well liked. He lived with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Ward.

W. B. Mitchell was a native of Virginia but had been in the west for several years, and came to the territory from the northwest. He had been in White Oaks about two years. He was a clever, whole souled young man and popular with all who knew him well. A brother is now en route to this city from his home in Missouri to take charge of his effects.

Jerry Conover was a new man in the camp, having come here a short time since from Roswell. He was said to have been married. His fiancee had come but a few days previous to his death. He had the appearance of a straight forward and honest boy.

Frank White was a stranger in the camp, scarcely anything is known of him. He was working his second shift on another man's time.

Repairs on the Old Abe mine will be pushed as rapidly as possible, and work will probably be resumed within the month unless the hoist should prove to be entirely ruined, in which case more time will be required. The new shaft house will be of iron, except the frame work, which will be of wood covered with the iron of the roof of the former structure. The timbers of the shaft are burned badly in the lower three hundred feet and near the top. In these sections much work will have to be replaced. None of the timbers in the drifts or other working parts of the mine were injured.

IOWA CASHIER MISSING

Cadiz, March 19.—The Spanish cruiser, Alfonso XIII., has returned after search for the missing cruiser Reina Regente, and reports having found the vessel sunk near Tiger Aventurero, not far from the straits of Gibraltar. Only twenty inches of the mast were above the water. The Alfonso XIII. has returned to the wreck with divers to recover the bodies. Deputy Diaz Moreno, formerly an officer in the Spanish navy, in the chamber of deputies March 11, read a statement of the former commander of the Reina Regente, in which the writer described the cruiser as crank and unable to weather a heavy storm, owing to increased weight of her armament. Admiral Beranger said the increased weight of the cruiser's deck guns was immaterial. They were well offset, he said, by the improvements in the construction. At the Dupuy de Lome there was a fight over the location of the Cuban insurgents, the principal congress being Alburquerque, New Mexico, and Santa Fe, N. Mex. Mr. Elkins was delighted by Albuquerque, and that city by the New Mexico delegates, chief among whom were Col. Max Frost and Col. Pedro Sanchez, of Santa Fe, and Senator Walter C. Hadley, of Alburquerque.

The prospect is that the congress at Alburquerque, during the week commencing September 19, will take days out to take excursions for the delegates in a special train and show them the upper Rio Grande valley, along the Denver & Rio Grande and Santa Fe. Southern Pacific always is fair north to Lordsburg, stopping a few hours in Santa Fe. Further take a day light ride up the Rio Grande valley, make a stop at Las Cruces, thence to El Paso, thence a night ride to Deming, and then getting up to Rincon in the forenoon, to visit the famous Percy valley irrigation systems. Other excursions may also be made as will seem advisable.

Frost and several companies from parts of New Mexico will be in Albuquerque at the time of the congress. The arrangement and reception of the delegates will be in charge of Hon. Walter C. Hadley, of Alburquerque, and he will be assisted by a committee of twenty, in which the Duke City is represented by Col. Frost, Hadley, H. Bernalillo county, L. Bradford Prince and Max Frost, of Santa Fe, with members from the Mesilla valley to be added. The committee has charge of the territorial appropriation of $[illegible] for the purpose of entertaining the congress, and the money will be spent where it will do the entire territory as much good as possible. It is proposed to have a special train of three or four Pullmans for the excursion. This is to be used principally for the delegates and to accommodate correspondents. The real work of the committee will commence in May when the congress and the resources of New Mexico will be agitated in editorial form, and be advertised to the world till the meeting of the congress in September. The work is certainly in able hands and if a lot of better qualified or more energetic men than these to the territorial committee could have been selected.

THE FANS WILL BE PLEASED.

What Albuquerque May Expect in Base Ball this Summer.

The Citizen, being in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject, can guarantee the fans that Alburquerque will be ably represented on the diamond next the coming summer, and if certain schemes, now being pushed, should materialize the boys will play on new grounds, and they will be on the side.

There never was a time, with the possible exception of the league year, that so much genuine interest is manifested in the national sport than at present, for the sporting instinct of our people have not forgotten the gilt edged ball put up by the youngsters last year, and for this reason they want to witness a repetition of last season's work, as good, if not better, and if the odds improve on their present practice work and watch all plays, our word for it, the championship for the southwest will again perch upon our banners.

Again, The Citizen now has reasons for saying that when the season opens and the team selected to represent Alburquerque, the playing members will appear on the diamond dressed in new and nobby uniforms.

Should new grounds be selected, and it looks as if they will be made to have a foreign base ball club, if possible the El Paso team, open them in a match game of base ball with the Alburquerque.

Sticks to other People's Goods

Julia Fuentes, or Williams, to the regret of her friends, it seems, cannot keep her fingers off articles belong to other people, and wherever Julia is given employment some article suddenly turns up missing. For the past few months the police have kept a close watch on Julia and her wearing apparel, but finding nothing to lead up to a conviction resorted to the expedient of securing a search warrant, signed by a certain gentleman who has recently arrived, and yesterday the premises of Julia were searched, with the startling revelation that they found in her trunks a number of articles belonging to Jas. H. Metzgar, some with his initials thereon, and other articles were found which leave those who have in the past given her employment. Julia is suspected of stealing some very costly jewelry, and it is intimated that if she will give up the articles she will not be prosecuted for the penitentiary.

northwest to the international convention of the Young Men's Christian association, which will be held in Springfield, Mass., in May next, will rendezvous in Chicago and proceed east in a procession of special trains. According to the latest lists from the district secretaries, fifty good delegates will attend the convention, and later returns may increase the number one-third.

BORDATION CONGRESS.

The Scope of the Work Planned for the Meeting.

Los Angeles News.

Work preliminary to sending the fourth session of the national congress of irrigation at Albuquerque, September 19 to 24, commenced. The three sessions held so far were at Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Denver. They were well attended and very profitable to the situation sections. At the Denver session there was a fight over the location of the Cuban sugar, the principal competitors being Albuquerque, New Mexico, and Santa Fe, N. Mex. Mr. Elkins was delighted by Albuquerque, and that city by the New Mexico delegates, chief among whom were Col. Max Frost and Col. Pedro Sanchez, of Santa Fe, and Senator Walter C. Hadley, of Alburquerque.

Sullivan was present, and when the decision was announced he jumped into the arena and made a wild rush for O'Donnell, but was taken in hand by two of the seconds and persuaded to resume his seat. Sullivan, in speaking of the fight, said: "I am sorry the fight ended as it did. I, for one, would have challenged the winner, and now more entered the ring."

Fired on American Flag

New York, March 19.—A cable dispatch from Havana published today to the effect that the commander of the Spanish cruiser Conde de Venadito had reported that he fired on a steamer March 5 off Cape May, after signaling her and was replied to by hoisting of a British flag on the steamer, has brought forth affidavits from Captain Crossman of the Alliance and his officers that the American and not the British ensign was flying from the Alliance. The report that the Alliance carried rifles on her southern cruise was also emphatically denied by the Panama Railroad company.

Prison Congress

Pittsburg, Pa., March 19.—The president has appointed representatives to the prison congress, which convenes at Paris June 19.

Sensational Will Case.

San Francisco, Cal., March 19.—A fresh sensation has developed in the legal squabble over the $[illegible] left by the late James G. Fair, by Attorney Lloyd introducing in court a will written in lead pencil on two sheets of legal cap paper, securely framed between two plates of glass, which purports to be a later document than the one recently stolen from the county recorder's office. This latter will divides the large estate equally between the three children, Miss Virginia Fair, Charley Fair and Mrs. Oelrichs. Lawyer Lloyd said that he would prove that after a long search this will had been found in the possession of a "very estimable lady," whose name he would not divulge at present. Attorneys for the executors believe it to be a forgery.

Keep it Alive

The press of Arizona should keep before the people of the territory the fact that the International Irrigation congress is to be held in Albuquerque next September, and urge that delegates be sent from each county; also suggest the good results to be attained through exhibits from each county at the New Mexico territorial fair, to be held the same week. Arizonans will be in a heap of eastern strangers in Albuquerque in September and the exhibit will present the best that our territory has in mineral, agricultural products, etc. Keep it alive.—Phoenix Gazette.

Spanish Question

Washington, March 19.—As far as known the state department has not yet received either United States Minister Taylor or Consul-General Williams at Havana of the question of identity of the Spanish steamer which fired upon the Alliance. As the commander of the Conde de Venadito says the steamer upon which he fired was flying the British flag there is a possibility that the story refers to another incident which may bring great trouble to the defense of the ensign. The Spanish cruiser, according to the report taken by Secretary Gresham, was bound to accept the colors displayed as evidence of the signal as establishing the nationality of the vessel. It begins to appear that our government is not disposed to be unduly exacting in the matter of a speedy response from the Spanish government to demands preferred by Minister Taylor, in so much as the entire Spanish cabinet has resigned.

Will Return to Albuquerque.

Mrs. Emma Austin, formerly of this city, now of Hot Springs, Mo., where she is with a hotel, writes to a friend here that after four years of trouble she has finally caused her suit for her share of the property left by her deceased husband, Jesse Austin, and that a final settlement will be reached some time in July, when she expects to return to this city and reside in the future. Mrs. Austin states that the family of her husband, especially the brother who was out here with him, attempted in all kinds of manner to prevent her from securing her rights, but the courts, slow as they are, finally got around to business and she secured a judgment.

Notice to Firemen.

If any person, hereafter, is caught tampering or fooling with the extinguishers, except in case of duty, he or they will be arrested and subject to fine. Firemen are requested to take notice and watch.
