

Saint Mary's Beacon.

LEONARDTOWN, MD.

THURSDAY Morning March 7.

HARD ON THE BUZZARD.—Recently Senator W. E. Chandler, of New Hampshire, and of Florida Electoral vote fame assailed several Senators in a speech among the number being Senator John Martin, of Kansas. In his reply to the assault Senator Martin compared Mr. Chandler to a buzzard.

The Fifty-third Congress adjourned sine die at noon Monday last. In the bitterness of disappointment at its failure to do what the people think it ought to have done it has few friendly critics. Time, however, may soften some of the asperities of the criticisms of its so-called mistakes. Often what one generation regards as error the next esteems wisdom.

Senator Sherman In A Glass House.

A great many wise and patriotic achievements of President Cleveland have been condemned by political and personal enemies in and out of his own party. But probably none of his acts have been more bitterly denounced than that of saving the credit of the government by his recent purchase of gold to make good the public promises. He made the best bargain possible under existing laws. He could have saved $16,000,000 to the taxpayers if Congress had given him the authority. He obtained ten days in which they could have passed the bill he wanted in the interest of the taxpayers, but Congress refused, and now the President's enemies seek to hold him responsible for the neglect of Congress. Of the president's bargain and his critics the New York Post says:

Senator Lodge proved again on Saturday the easy superiority of an educated man over blatherers in their own specialty. After the mining camp Senators had poured out the vituperation on the President for saving the public credit, the cultured son of Harvard distanced them all by saying of the bond contract: "It is on its face the blackest public contract ever made by the government of the United States. Yesterday the cry was taken up by Senator Sherman. He left the blackness and the blackguardism to Lodge, and contented himself with calling the contract 'futile and imprudent.' This suggests an inquiry as to the nature of the contracts which he himself made as Secretary of the Treasury. What were they and what was said of them at the time? The details are all set forth in the volumes published by the government in 1880 on 'Special Resumption and Refunding of the National Debt.' One has only to read it to discover that essentially the same difficulties confronted the treasury then as embarrass it now, and that essentially the same measures were chosen to surmount them. The arguments that make out Carlisle's contract black, make out Sherman's blacker.

The first argument which Lodge and his fellow blackguards use is that the treasury has put itself in the power of foreigners. The Jews have us on the hip. But what are the names of the parties of the second part in the contracts made by Secretary Morrill in 1876 and Secretary Sherman in 1877 and 1878? Why, they are the dreadful names of the sound of which every true American starts in horror, unless he is in a position where he must get a loan—the names of Rothschild, Seligman, Raphael, Kuhn, Loeb, Hoffmann and Company, as ominous. On April 12, 1878, the following cable message was received at the treasury in Washington, than which, as the orators say, nothing more damning ever appeared in a government publication: "Very pleased we have entered into relations again with American government. Shall do our best to make the business successful." ROTHSCHILDS.

"What a splitting of throats and cracking of ear drums—there would be over such a message now—the Jew firm gloating over a victimized secretary! The second argument to show the exceeding blackness of the Carlisle contracts is the fact that it gives the syndicate an option on all bonds that may be issued up to next October. If this makes the Carlisle contract black it makes the Morrill and Sherman contracts blacker. Those documents give the wicked foreign syndicate not an option, but an 'exclusive right' to subscribe for further bonds. As a matter of fact, on two occasions Mr. Sherman had offers for several millions of bonds at better figures than the syndicate would give. He was obliged to decline them on the ground that the syndicate had a monopoly. This makes a mere option look positively white.

"Finally, say or shriek the blatherers, the syndicate is going to make an enormous amount of money. This is what worries Mr. Sherman. Selling a bond at 104 which may soon be placed at 118 or 120 is too much for him. Senator Gray forcibly retorts that the great Ohio trimmer really makes the favorable situation created by the prompt action of the treasury the ground for condemning it. If the action had not been taken no bonds could have been sold at any price. The nation was only three days away from bankruptcy. Owing to that emergency and by surmounting it the bankers were able to make a profit out of their investment. This is a gutten answer on general principles. But a better answer to Senator Sherman is of the tu quoque sort. If it is 'futile and imprudent to sell a 93 bond at 104, what is it to sell it at 4 per cent, bond at 100, only to have it quoted in a few years at 126?"

Senator Sherman dwells in an even more fragile glasshouse than this. He admits that the motives and the character of Secretary Carlisle are beyond suspicion. Was the same said of him in 1877 '79? Has he forgotten the ugly talk in those years about 'For Sherman'? Has he no memory for congressional inquiries; for demands for a list of commissions paid, (and they amounted up into the millions) for the complaints about double interest allowed favored banks, and in particular, for the charge that he had practically hanged over a clean $1,000,000 of profits to a single bank in this city? Has he no recollection of the talk of indicting or impeaching him? In an interview in the Tribune of December 25, 1878, Mr. Sherman admitted that the banks had made huge profits out of the exercise of his discretion in making them refunding agents. Is he the man to lead off in railing accusations against his successor in office? It is safe to say that no charges of personal dishonesty will be made against Secretary Carlisle in the New York republican platform of 1895—such as were made against Senator Sherman, by implication in the New York democratic platform of 1879. For our part, we never credited those charges for an instant."

(Correspondence of the Beacon.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1895.
At noon today, Basset time, the curtain was rung down on the last act of the fifty-third Congress. Of the many acts of this many-sided drama, some have been comic, some serious, and some almost tragic.

With the close of the play many of the actors—those whose names have been associated or connected with public matters for more than a score of years—retire to private life, bankrupt in health and fortune. Notably among these are Bland, the great silviculturist, the father of the "dollars of our daddies," and whose pretty wife prizes as her most precious treasure a letter made out of two silver dollars that encloses a picture of her husband. The locket was made by the order of the Director of the Mint from the first silver dollars coined under the Bland Act. Mr. Bland retires poor, man, whose sole possession is a house in Lebanon, Missouri.

Holman, "the watch dog of the Treasury," whose "drained" object has saved millions to Uncle Sam, retires to his little farm of one hundred and sixty acres a poor old man. Springer with his red carnation has to give up his political hobbies and go to hard work. Kilgour, of Texas, will no longer kick against the pricks of the house, but against the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune." Maryland will lose the services of her eloquent son, Isidor Rayner, whose voice in brilliant oratory so often electrified the House.

The Senate loses that gallant gentleman, Gen. Hanson, of North Carolina, retired to make way for a more progressive and younger man, but for whom the President has provided a pleasant berth—the Mexican mission—made vacant by the death of Minister Gray. Dolph, of Oregon, is succeeded by Baker, and so the whirligig of time changes the politicians if not the politics at the Capitol. The sugar planters get a bounty of $5,000,000, 2 cents per pound on all sugar raised. What a Godsend such a bounty on tobacco would be to planters of lower Maryland.

Five million dollars for two war vessels. Money voted away by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The President refused to go the Capitol to sign the bills as they were passed, but with the Cabinet Officers carefully scrutinized each bill as they were brought to him at the White House. Nor would he sign any bill brought to him after 12 o'clock, the legal hour for adjournment—thus the bill to give officers and employees of both Houses an extra month's pay failed.

While the Members and Senators have been struggling under the burdens, silver and always silver coming to the front, until they could truly say every financial cloud had a silver lining, their wives and daughters have been having a right royal time. Never was there a gayety of a longer season. Receptions, teas, balls at all hours, readings, lectures and congresses, councils, &c., have taken every minute of their time. The female portion of the Fifty-third Congress has had a very good time.

The Cabinet houses have been open as usual, but of these Mrs. Carlisle's and Miss Herbert's receptions were the most popular. Mrs. Hoke Smith has been prevented by ill-health from taking part in official functions. With the resignation of the Postmaster-General special losses one of its sweetest singers, Mrs. Bissell. It is a remarkable fact that of the forty-eight Postmaster-Generals only eight have served full terms.

The new Postmaster-General, Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, was defeated in the last election, but being the originator of the tariff bill he has been provided for. Mrs. Wilson is a gentle little woman, who, in spite of her husband's prominence, has taken no part in the social functions. She is very highly cultivated, being the daughter of one of the Professors of Columbia University, and prefers books to people.
