CLEWS TELLS OF STOCK EXCHANGE SITUATION

Certain, Banker Says, That If Law-Breaking Monopolies Had Not Been Stopped, Great Disorder Would Occur

New York, Sept. 26.—Depression and nervousness have again ruled the Stock Exchange. No account was taken of improvement in the Moroccan situation, the satisfactory condition of our foreign trade, the strengthened condition of American banks or the fact that we have been able to loan large sums to Europe and take back considerable amounts of stocks sold to foreign owners. Nor was any account taken of improvement in the crop situation, or the knowledge that our crops will be above average in quantity, that they will bring good prices and insure the American farmer another year of prosperity, that the distribution of cotton goods has been accelerated by price concessions and that the cotton goods industry is being somewhat relieved by the decline in cotton, that the iron trade is more active and that a larger volume of business has been done than is generally realized because of price concessions so that the experts of steel manufactures are running upon an unprecedented scale. While there are many reasons for discouragement, there are also numerous reasons for encouragement, such as those just mentioned. In the present state of public temper, however, they receive no recognition. At the moment the Street appears to revel in pessimism. The strained monetary conditions abroad arising from the continued fall in securities served to aggravate the depression here, particular attention being paid to the simultaneous advance in all the principal foreign bank rates and the decline in British Consols, the latter due entirely to the ability of capital to secure better rates than 2 1-2 per cent.

Of course there are reasons for much of the recent depression, reasons too familiar to require repetition and which would seem to have been more than discounted by recent declines. What strikes the experienced observer is the entire lack of nerve and utter indisposition to face any disturbance with calmness or courage. Our financial leaders are not the weak-kneed, rubber-spined men they now seem to be. It is not to be supposed that they are shivering because of current adverse conditions, or the fact that many of our huge industrial concerns must go through the throes of reorganization. They know full well that the country will consume about the same amount of food and clothing as usual and that shelter will be as necessary as ever. They appreciate that the trusts will continue to work six days in the week in spite of legal mandates compelling them to change their form. They know that real values will not be destroyed. Standard Oil and American Tobacco have gone through the period of alarm and are earning, some the less because they must dissolve like other corporations organized in defiance of law. Many complaints come from those who are enjoying monopoly profits, which, if continued, would certainly lead the country to far worse social and political troubles than now threaten. Time, the correction of such abuses is never pleasant. Reforms are always unpopular, and sometimes, and as at present, we may have an overdose of reform; but for this the lawbreaker, not the reformer, must be held responsible. One thing is certain, that if the law-breaking monopolies had not been checked, we should now be on the highroad to socialism, and to far graver political disorder than now seems likely. What is now being endured is not so bad as what might have been, for which there is reason to give thanks. It is time that our business men took a calmer and more courageous view of the situation. The country is resting, liquidation, coming down from the heights of inflation to a more normal level, and because we are not rushing on at record-breaking pace and making big profits that is no reason for the present irrational state of depression.

The president's address on the Sherman act on Tuesday was at first somewhat misunderstood. It created an entirely unwarranted feeling of uneasiness, when in reality it should have given ample reassurance, if correctly interpreted. Mr. Taft's attitude toward monopoly is unchanged. He recognizes, as does any thoughtful observer, that the drift toward monopoly is against public welfare and has brought us closer to industrial revolution and Socialism than any other known force. He, therefore, wisely insists upon performing his duty in enforcing the law. He objects to any revision of the Sherman law because the Supreme Court has already built up a series of interpretations which make the law in its application well understood. Revision, he believes, would simply revive agitation and probably set aside all of the excellent work and thought already expended upon the subject by the supreme court. The decision is now being enforced in the "light of reason," and revision, he thinks, is wholly unnecessary and could accomplish nothing except further injurious disturbance of business affairs. Mr. Taft also very properly argues against the proposal that the supreme court should decide between good and bad trusts, as imposing improper work upon the court, the inference being that trade monopolies when good would be allowed to live; only the bad being sent to perdition. Mr. Taft probably recognizes the utter impossibility of keeping monopolies always good in the present make-up of human nature. Monopolies, it is as well to remember, are only safe where the beatitudes can be enforced. Altogether, Mr. Taft's address was very reassuring. While showing prime regard for sound public policy, it at the same time showed keen consideration for business interests and plainly intimated that no hostile campaign was to be conducted against large corporations as such. Business interests have been unduly harassed by excessive and often irrational attacks upon capital for purely political ends. Against the latter, Mr. Taft has lifted a strong arm regardless of consequences to himself, and this is something which should be assuring to financial and business interests.

The future course of the market is uncertain. Liquidation may carry prices still further, but it is quite certain that as soon as completed, a sharp upward reaction will follow. We can only repeat our previous advice of exercising much discrimination in purchases. Several very poor railroad statements were issued during the week and not unlikely some of the industrials will soon show the consequences of trade reaction, leaving the maintenance of dividends somewhat in question. The future of United States Steel and other big corporations is an important uncertainty. The International Harvester is reported to be contemplating voluntary dissolution; so, too, is the United States Steel. If dissolution of the latter is possible. If these companies adopt this sensible policy others threatened with indictment will unquestionably follow suit. The securities of high grade railroads and industrial corporations having a well-established record for earning capacity are in many cases selling at exceedingly attractive prices to the investor. Well selected purchases of this character will undoubtedly result in good profits to the buyer within a few months.

OIL MEN HUSTLE TO SAVE THEIR CONCESSIONS

New Orleans, La., Sept. 26.—That Lord Cowdry of England, who holds the greatest oil concessions ever granted by former President Diaz of Mexico is negotiating with the Standard Oil company and the Waters-Pierce Oil company of Texas for a transfer to prevent possible cancellation of the concessions by the Madero government, was the statement made here by S. G. Hopkins, late legal adviser in Washington of Gen. Francisco I. Madero, Jr., en route to Mexico.

"Lord Cowdry has the exclusive right to drill for oil in the national lands of eight states of the republic, his concession prohibiting the owners of properties from drilling for oil on their own lands within a certain distance of the Cowdry wells," said Mr. Hopkins.

Cowdry's Reported Plan.

"This concession deprives the private land owner of a portion of the natural revenue without giving him compensation, which is as much a violation of the constitution of Mexico as it would be in the United States.

Lord Cowdry realizes that his concessions are likely to be attacked by the Mexican congress, and he is anxious to dispose of them. It is his plan to form an American corporation in which the Waters-Pierce company will be given a controlling interest in order that the good offices of the American government may be secured to prevent the forfeiture of the original concessions.
