MONTENEGRO.

One of the pre-eminent characteristics of the typical American is a sense of justice and a demand for fair play. We believe that other nations have sufficient of this same spirit to share the general American feeling of indignation at the attitude of Austria-Hungary toward the little country of Montenegro. It will be strange, moreover, if the world passively condones the action of a great supposedly Christian power in allying itself with the heathen against a smaller Christian power which has fought the battle against the Crescent with an indomitable and magnificent bravery which challenges the admiration of civilization. Every lover of fair play will sympathize with the sturdy little kingdom which has by sheer stubborn courage and valor and determination defeated a powerful foe and wrested from the minions of the sultan the fortress of Scutari, only to have the fruits of victory snatched from its grasp, and the tremendous sacrifice of blood and national resources made futile and unavailing.

The spectacle of Austria, appealing frantically to the powers and threatening to take the law into her own hands, is like that of a lion snarling at a fox terrier. If the powers sustain Austria and grind this tiny nation under foot oblivious of her splendid example of patriotism and martial ability, the conclusion is unavoidable tha the world is going backward instead of forward and that liberty and justice are still an iridescent dream in Europe.

Nicholas, king of Montenegro, is entitled to the name of the Grand Old Man of Europe, and his protest against the great injustice with which his people are threatened should shame the nations.

PICTURES AND ART TREASURES.

The wonderful collection of paintings, miniatures, porcelains and other works of art belonging to the late J. Pierpont Morgan were left with a string tied to them. They become the absolute property of the testator's son and in case of his death of his grandson, who is a youth in Harvard university.

But, says Mr. Morgan in his will, "should either my said son or my said grandson thus succeed to the ownership of these collections, I hope he will be able, in such manner as he shall think best, to make a permanent disposition, or from time to time permanent dispositions of them or of such portions of them as he may determine which will be a substantial carrying out of the intentions which I have thus cherished." The "intentions" referred to is declared in the will to have been a desire to make a disposition of them that would render them permanently available for the instruction and pleasure of the American people.

The city of New York is now engaged in building in Central park a double wing as an addition to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. This was done with the knowledge and consent of the late Mr. Morgan, who was then the president of the art museum. There is therefore little reason for doubting what the permanent disposition of the collection will be.

It will constitute a great memorial to the generous testator, costing as it undoubtedly did over the sum of $50,000,000. The residuary legatee no doubt will see that the intention of his father is fully carried out. He was trained by his father to the banking business and the integrity of the father was no doubt instilled in the son. The American people can rest content under the terms of the will.

SCHOOLS FOR MEXICO.

While President Huerta is relying mainly upon bullets and bayonets to educate the refractory states up to the beneficence of his rule, the new minister of public instruction is planning to undermine the revolutionists by means of 5,000 additional schools. As revolutionists are mostly beyond the school age, the minister seems to be oversanguine as to immediate results from that method.

[illegible] is building well and upon safe foundations. Illiteracy may not be, as he believes, the sole cause of the revolutionary furor and the political chaos which followed the removal of the iron hand of Porfirio Diaz, yet it is a prime factor in Mexican unrest.

Mexico is not without schools of good quality, but the difficulty is that they are closed to the millions of illiterates. With less than 300 rudimentary schools in the republic, is it any wonder that out of a total population of 15,000,000 (the last census showed 10,324,448 Mexicans who can neither read nor write?

With such a people the liberties of an enlightened democracy are impossible, and it was a disastrous dream that sought to establish them in advance of the requisite elementary education.

There is a note of pathos in those figures when viewed in the light of the tragic end of the visionaries who ignored.

However, if President Huerta believes that there is only one method of ruling the Mexico of today, his government must be credited with at least one minister building for the freer Mexico of tomorrow.

BETTER PAY FOR THE FIREMEN.

The Herald favors the mayor's recommendation that the city provide better pay for the members of the city fire fighting force. During the past few years the equipment of the city fire department has been greatly improved; the automobile fire engine at present in use brings the city fully up to date in this regard and everything else has kept pace with the auto except the pay of the men who fight the fires.

Sixty dollars a month for twenty-four hours per day is not enough for the fire laddies. It is not living wages, especially for the class of men required in the fire fighting service. A fireman must be able-bodied and vigorous; but, more than that, he must be intelligent and quick-witted and of demonstrated physical and moral courage. It is not fair to expect to keep men of this type on the force unless they are paid what they are worth. If we are to retain such men and keep the personnel up to the improving standard of the equipment, we must afford the men a reasonable compensation.

Good men in the fire department are important at any time; they are going to become more important as the city grows and the responsibilities of the fire department increase.

At a time when more is being conceded to women and young people than ever before, divorce among the married, and suicide among the young, increase. Therein is a problem for psychologists and sociologists.

What, if any, is the relation of the abolished senatorial bath tub to clean politics?

Not Overdressed.

A Sweeping Change.

In springtime, when the word she gave,
Would I, her glad perspiring slave,
The tacks pry out once more;

Then "putting down," our heads would meet,
And how a kiss made labor sweet
When Flora swept the floor!

Ah, me! From which you may infer
Home's pleasures are not what they were
In simpler days of yore;
Science our joy domestic robs,
And vacuum pumps now do the jobs
We did with sentimental throbs,
When Flora swept the floor.

CAULIFLOWER By Jean Hubbs

Boiled Cauliflower.

Wash and trim a head of cauliflower and soak it for an hour in cold salted water, head down. Rinse thoroughly, cover with boiling salted water and boil until done. Drain and serve with any preferred sauce.

Baked Cauliflower—1.

Prepare according to directions given for boiled cauliflower. Put into a buttered baking dish, pour over a drawn butter sauce, sprinkle with bread crumbs, dot with butter, and add a little grated cheese, if desired. Brown in the oven and serve in the baking dish.

Baked Cauliflower—2.

Prepare according to directions given for boiled cauliflower. Put into a baking dish, cover with bread crumbs, dot with butter, and bake until brown. Pour a cream sauce around it and serve, or pour the sauce over, sprinkle with crumbs, and bake brown. Add a little grated cheese if desired.

Buttered Cauliflower.

Boil two cauliflowers in salted water until tender. Drain, separate into flowerets, arrange in a serving dish and season with salt and pepper. Heat a cupful of butter in frying pan without browning, skim, and put in enough fresh bread crumbs to make a smooth thin paste. Spread over the cauliflower and serve.

Creamed Cauliflower.

Boil cauliflower until soft, adding a pinch of soda to the water. Drain, cut into convenient pieces for serving, pour over a cream sauce and serve or break into flowerets and reheat in cream sauce.

Cauliflower Saute.

Separate cooked cauliflower into flowerets and brown slightly in butter, or marinate in French dressing and fry in oil. Sprinkle with minced parsley and serve.

Fried Cauliflower—1.

Clean a cauliflower and separate into flowerets. Parboil for five minutes, change the water, and cook until tender, adding a tablespoon of salt to the water. Drain, dry, and if desired marinate in French dressing, dip in crumbs, then in an egg beaten with three tablespoonfuls of water, then in crumbs or batter. Fry in deep fat and serve with tartar or tomato sauce.

Fried Cauliflower—2.

Mix two tablespoons of flour with the yolks of two eggs well beaten. Add enough water to make a thin paste, and salt to season. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and dip parboiled cauliflower into the batter. Fry in deep fat and serve hot.

Fried Cauliflower Italienne.

Parboil two heads of cauliflower in salted water, drain, cool, and break into flowerets. Beat together three eggs, one cupful of milk, and two tablespoons of olive oil. Add salt and pepper to season and enough sifted flour to make a fritter batter. Beat with an egg beater until very smooth. Dip each piece of cauliflower into batter and fry brown and crisp in deep fat.

Cauliflower Fritters.

Make a batter of a tablespoon of melted butter, half a cup of milk, the yolk of an egg well beaten, salt and pepper to season and a tablespoon or more of flower. Separate freshly cooked cauliflower into convenient pieces. Dip in the batter and fry in deep fat.

Escalloped Cauliflower—1.

Separate the cauliflower into flowerets and boil until tender in water to cover. Drain, and arrange on slices of buttered toast. Cook together one tablespoonful each of butter and flour, add one cupful of stock and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg and add a tablespoon of onion juice. Take from the fire, add the yolks of three eggs well beaten, pour over the cauliflower and serve at once.

Escalloped Cauliflower—2.

Boil until tender, separate into small pieces, and pack stems downward in a buttered baking dish, or use the cauliflower unbroken. Mix a cupful of bread crumbs, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, and enough cream or milk to moisten, pepper and salt to season, and one egg well beaten. Spread over the cauliflower, cover and bake for six minutes. Then uncover and brown. Serve in the same dish.

Escalloped Cauliflower.

Prepare according to directions given for creamed cauliflower and put into a baking dish in layers, alternating with chopped hard-boiled eggs. Cover with crumbs, dot with butter, and brown in the oven, or mix the sauce and the eggs with the cooked cauliflower. The eggs may be omitted and grated cheese used instead.

HOO'S HOO.
By John W. Carey in Atlanta Journal.

Who slips inside the capitol and confiscates the plant, the while the Moose is pestering the ancient Elephant? (The balance of the line-up being Kelly's Burkes and Sheas?). Who has some little troubles, too—a dozen, more or less? (Wot, ho, boy, page T. Roosevelt!) Judge Dunne? (It's one due guess!)

FRANTIC FABLES
Ode to an Anaconda.

By Henry Horsecollar.

I have always maintained that if the magazine editors of this country would publish the stories they put into their waste baskets and put into the waste baskets the stories they publish, we would have better magazines.

I occasionally visit several magazine editors of my acquaintance and purchase their waste baskets; for, as I have said, I prefer to purchase their waste baskets than their magazines.

Near the bottom of the basket I got yesterday from the "Posmocolitan Magazine" the following poem which I now give to the world for the first time:

Ode to an Anaconda.

I rather think that you'd be some
Annoyed to travel on your tum.
The anaconda, I must say,
However, does it every day.
He journeys over hill and dale
By pushing briskly with his tail.
And for his evening table d'hote
He'll eat a cow or horse—or goat.
Please note the cut above and see
The man behind the upas tree.
I rather think that he will take
His now and slay the greedy snake.
And then I think that you'll agree
He'll eat him with his cake and tea.

THE SETTING HEN.
By Walt Mason, in Phoenix Republican.

The old hen sits, with feathers ruffled, upon her bunch of fourteen eggs; for three long weeks she hasn't scuffled around the yard on scratching legs. She's tended strictly to her knitting—fidelity's the old hen's boast; by day and night still brooding, sitting, the martyr mother at her post. And now the time has come for hatching, and soon the old hen, swelled with pride, around the dooryard will be scratching, her fluffy offspring at her side. Then mark, O mark her guard and cherish the welfare of her little flock. Before she'd see one chicken perish, she'd whip a wildcat or a hawk. And when the lightning and the thunder announce the sudden pelting storm, the chickens crawl her wide wings under, and she protects them with her form. There's nothing, truly, more affecting than mother love that old hens bear, as they go chuckling round, prospecting to find their children's bill of fare. I sympathize with orphan chickens hatched out in patent tin machines; I can't imagine what the dickens that sort of immitation means. To rob a chicken of its mother—to ride its owner on a rail! One crime's as low down as the other, and each should send a man to jail.

Use less Butter—
More Cottolene

No wonder butter is so high. Particular women who are loath to use lard or cooking butter in their cakes and fine pastry, use table butter. With butter at the price you have to pay for it, that's downright extravagance. Cottolene is just as good as butter for pastry; for frying, it is better. And Cottolene costs no more than lard. Moreover, Cottolene is richer, and two-thirds of a pound of it will go as far as a pound of butter or lard.

And lard and Cottolene are not to be mentioned in the same breath, for Cottolene is a vegetable product, healthful, always safe—makes digestible, rich, but never greasy food.
