WOLGAST'S CAREER DISCOURAGING THROUGHOUT

Continual Run of Hard Luck Stories for Former Lightweight Champion; May Be Out of Game for Good Now.

(By Harry Carr in the Los Angeles Times.)

For the second time, little Ad Wolgast has been counted out by a doctor.

He kept his injured hand in hot bandages during the night; but it was no use. Yesterday the Dundee fight was definitely called off.

Ad was for going on anyhow and fighting the Italian with one hand in order to bolster up the somewhat shattered finances of his manager. But Tom Jones, the intended beneficiary, refused to hear of it.

The little Dutchman has been advised by the physicians to stay out of the ring for at least six months, if not forever. He says he will accept the decision and in a few days will leave Los Angeles either for Medford, Ore., where he has a real estate deal, or for Honolulu on a pleasure trip with his wife and Mrs. Tom Jones.

In either case it is likely that the ring has seen the last of this game, lion-hearted, little Teuton, the bravest and most unfortunate little champion in the world.

I have seen a lot of men and women, too, stand up to be sentenced; but I never heard sentence passed in circumstances that seemed to me so pitiful as was this scene in Dr. Hagen's office last Saturday.

With his hair all tousled up and his nose scratched and his hand held out appealingly for the doctor's examination, Ad looked like a little boy. I could see that the doctor hated to tell him.

"I wouldn't mind the pain," said Ad. "I could stand that, but you can't fight with a right hand that's no the bum. You can't help saving it. You kinda push the blows over instead of just flinging 'em in any old way."

"Well," said the doctor regretfully, "it will hurt you very badly. It will hurt you every time you fight for the next six months just as badly as it hurts this minute. In fact"—he hesitated before he passed sentence—"in fact, it will always be liable to hurt you for many years to come."

Ad sat looking at the door for a minute, a forlorn figure of a broken-hearted little boy. The line between him and fortune and money and reputation had been snapped as though cut with a pair of scissors.

I can imagine how any professional man we know would have taken this tough blow. I can see any one of them walking the floor and chewing cigars and scolding his wife, but Ad was a "game little guy" to the end.

He abruptly pushed back his chair and said, "Well, I guess that's about all there is to it."

Oddly enough, it comes back to me then, when Dr. Hagen was a police surgeon and I was a police reporter I hear him tell a man who had been burned in an accident, that he would have to die. And that fellow was a game guy, too. He took his done like Ad. He gave the doctor one searching glance of reproach and turned away to his little white hospital bed, with a grunt.

Coming back in the automobile Ad talked a little about the hard luck that has pursued him every minute he has been in the ring. He made his way to the championship and held it in the face of obstacles that would have discouraged men of whom the world has a right to expect more.

He has been sick or hurt before nearly every fight of his life.

He first came to the front rank of the lightweights by his fight with Hat Nelson at Naud's Junction some years ago. This same left hand was out of commission that night. He had cracked a bone in it and, for the first time in his life, had to fight with his right hand.

"That was the night," said Ad, "that I learned to use my right. I never could do anything with a right until that night when I had to.

Shortly thereafter, he fought Hat Nelson at Point Richmond and won the lightweight championship in the bloodiest and most terrible battle the modern ring has seen. He went from a doctor's hands into the ring that day, having been under treatment for most of the time he was in training. were reaping fortunes in easy money on the stage. Wolgast was again in a doctor's hands. Soon after winning the championship, he fought ten rounds with a tenth-rater named Tommy McFarland and broke his right arm trying to deliver a right cross over Tommy's elbow.

Before this was thoroughly healed, he took on what looked to be an easy-money host in Philadelphia with a little boy named Knockout Brown, who thereby became famous on account of Ad's inability to use his sick arm.

After a few small fights he was matched to fight Packy McFarland in Milwaukee for a big purse and the fight was stopped by the sheriff of the county. They had lined up the governor and all the important dignitaries, but overlooked the sheriff as the mistletoe.

Showing his disappointment over this fluke, Wolgast signed articles to fight Freddie Welsh at Vernon on Thanksgiving day two years ago. The day of the fight he was seized by an attack of appendicitis and spent that afternoon in an operating room instead of in the ring.

Before he was through his convalescent period, Ad fought Willie Ritchie and undoubtedly materially reduced his training vitality by doing so. In the east, that year, he fought Tommy Melony and had trouble with this same hand.

Misfortune again overtook him when he was matched to fight Joe Rivers last Fourth of July. Ad was still a sick boy and never should have signed for that match. His vitality was so low that it was impossible for him to train properly. Just before the fight he injured this same left thumb on Hobo Dougherty in training and went into the ring with what was practically a crippled hand. He said he could nothing more than cuff Rivers with his left hand.

He said the hand hurt him very badly in both fights with Tommy Murphy.

Poor little Ad has fought most of his game battles with a broken sword.

The crowning disappointment for him was the signing of Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers. "I don't know whether or not I will ever be right again," he said, "but there is one fellow I would give a lot to lick; that's this bunk champion, Willie Ritchie. But I guess I will never get a chance; he will never fight me. He's afraid."

"I would like to see Joe Rivers get his title away from him," continued Ad, "and I think he will. Ritchie is one of those mechanical fighters. You can always tell what he is going to do next. He feints with his left; then slams with his right. I think the Mexican is too fast for him. There is one thing, though: Ritchie can take a lot of punishment. Rivers will have to hand him a lot of hard ones to put him out. I never hit any one as hard as I did Ritchie."

MAYOR GAYNOR ON SEAT HOG'S TRAIL

Indignant New York Executive Asks Aldermen to Make Offense Misdemeanor.

New York, June 11.—Mayor Gaynor today declared war upon the pest who comes with summer—the end-seat hog. In recommending the passage of an ordinance which would make the holding of an end seat a misdemeanor, the executive writes to the board of aldermen thus:

"The habit of all selfish people, and especially if they be big and fat, is to take the end place on the seats of the summer cars which run crosswise of the car, and stick there, instead of moving along to the other end as other people get on the car. This causes great inconvenience.

"All those who come after these selfish people have to climb over their legs, and press by them as best they can. I woud suggest to you to consider whether you should not pass an ordinance making this selfish practice a misdemeanor and requiring those who enter cars with cross seats to move as far in as there is a vacant space to sit down.

"The selfishness and hoggishness of some people in this matter is a distressing spectacle, to say nothing of the inconvenience which they cause, especially to mothers with little children."

Aldermen are popularly supposed to be "big and fat."

EPIDEMIC OF FIRES IN DEMING

One Residence Destroyed, Another Damaged and Rooming House Threatened By Coffee Heater Blaze.

(Special Correspondence to the Herald)

Deming, N. M., June 10.—There was an epidemic of fires in Deming today. Early this morning the residence of Jas. M. McDougal was totally destroyed by fire. It was occupied by Mr. Reed, who failed to save any considerable amount of his household goods. The explosion of the coffee heater at the Superior restaurant threatened to destroy the Carson rooming house, but by prompt action the flames were extinguished. This morning at 11 o'clock the Loomis residence caught fire and the back wall was burned to the ground. The efficient service of the Deming fire department saved the rest of the building.

John S. Peugh of Grand Junction, Colo., after spending ten days on a prospecting trip has decided to locate here permanently. He leaves for Grand Junction tonight to make arrangements for moving his family here.

W. P. Tossel was stricken with paralysis this afternoon about 5 o'clock, and is in a very serious condition.

Geo. E. Bell of the Capitol Dome district reports his new well delivering 500 gallons per minute. He has a well of the air-tight type equipped with first-class pumping machinery. He says that his neighbor, L. C. Paxton, has just brought in a 800-gallon well, and reports a considerable activity in the Capitol Dome district.

At a dinner given at the Harvey house last evening by Mr. and Mrs. Jno. M. McTeer to a few of their friends, the engagement of their niece Miss Julia Porter to Jno. W. Dymond, a prominent young business man in Deming, was announced.

World's Greatest Livestock Show at Panama-Pacific Exposition; $175,000 Offered in Premiums

$225,000 for Harness Races; Valuable Breeds of Cattle from Foreign Lands Will Be Shown, Livestock Will be on Display Ten Months and Big Poultry Exhibits Are Scheduled.

San Francisco, June 11.—Great prizes and valuable trophies are to be offered for prize winning livestock at the Panama-Pacific International exposition. The exposition management has set aside $75,000 as prize money for the livestock divisions alone and besides this there will be many special funds and trophies. $225,000 will be devoted to these races.

An innovation which has already attracted the attention of breeders all over the world is that livestock will be on display throughout the period of the exposition, which lasts for ten consecutive months from February to December, 1915. This is a decidedly new venture in universal expositions and a record display is assured in the livestock division. Prize winning stock from parts of the world will be shown.

Two race meets will be held at the exposition during the year, one in the spring and one in the autumn. The $225,000 offered under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders association. The races will be international in character and will be held on a mile race track which is now being constructed on the exposition site at Harbor View.

The main competition for $175,000 in prize money and the supplemental offerings of the breed associations will take place in October and November, but, through the assistance of the breed association it is planned to have specimens exhibited all the year round in each of the classes which make up the livestock department, in keeping with the character of the whole exposition, the exhibits in this department will be of an educational nature and display signs will be used to teach the name of the breed, origin and the use of every animal exhibited. It is also planned to have moving pictures, slides and lectures incident to the livestock industry in all its branches in parts of the world, an exposition feature which is regarded as greater in advance of all previous efforts. Plans are made to land cattle from foreign countries at the quarantine station at Angel Island in San Francisco bay. Thence the stock will be transported directly to the exposition ferry slip.

An initial fund of $1,500 has been set aside by the American Hereford Cattle Breeders' association to be applied toward supplemental premiums for the 1915 exposition. It is expected that a similar amount will be set aside in 1914 and 1915.

The American Shorthorn Breeders' association has already taken preliminary action in regard to reserving funds for stock prizes and three of the leading Dairy Cattle Herd Book associations are at present planning for the participation in the exposition.

Individual sheep breeders in England and New Zealand are taking great interest in the sheep section. One of the smaller sheep record associations of America has inaugurated a plan for the creation of a fund of $1,000 to be offered as supplemental premiums at the exposition. The fund is being raised by voluntary offerings by members of the association interested in the promotion of the breeds. Other associations in this country and abroad will doubtless follow this initial plan.

One of the most outstanding features of the department of livestock will be a great poultry show, where it is expected that at least 12,000 birds will be on exhibit. To this end an advisory committee has been appointed in each state of the union. Each committee consists of three prominent poultry breeders appointed from each state to work up an interest in the most comprehensive poultry exhibit ever made.

Many of the poultry associations in America are planning supplemental premiums, among them being the International American Dominique club, the Red Breeders' Club of the World, the American Light Brahma club, the American Rose Comb Brown Leghorn club, and the Crested Fowl Breeders' association of America. All these associations have already offered trophies and cash prizes and interest is as keen abroad as it is in America.

The livestock department of the exposition has set aside the sum of $7,500 to be paid as premiums for carlots of cattle, sheep and swine. Arrangements have been made for sales at auction of the animals. This feature, in addition to the prizes offered, is an inducement to breeders to prepare for the international competition.

In addition to the competitions there will be a continuous exhibit of all the important breeds of horses. Supplemental premiums will be added to the exposition premium list. The greatest collection of pure and crossbred Arabs is promised by the Arabian horse breeders of the United States.

An attractive feature of the livestock department will be an international army remount demonstration and contest. It is planned that the outcome of this demonstration will be an official pronouncement as to what really constitutes a horse suitable for cavalry purposes so that breeders may know what to produce in order to supply the demand from America and other countries.

The livestock department is under the direction of Daniel O. Lively, one of the best known livestock men in the United States. Mr. Lively, who is in intimate touch with the largest breeders in America and abroad, announces that the exhibit will be the finest that any exposition has ever presented to the world.
