RUSSIAN FLYING SANITARY CORPS HAS HARDSHIPS

Many Difficulties Encounteredin Hospital Work Which Is Carried On Under Most Trying Conditions.

(Associated Press Correspondence.) Headquarters of the Russian Army of the Center.—The following story of the Twenty-first flying column of the First Siberian corps was related by Andrew Kalpaschnikoff, former secretary of the Russian embassy at Washington. Kalpaschnikoff offered his service to his country at the outbreak of the war and was assigned to service with the Red Cross. He became identified with the Twenty-first flying column and soon was placed in command of that body.

"The reckless daring of the First Siberian corps," said Kalpaschnikoff, "is well known throughout Russia. The flying column attached to such a fighting organization has no easy task. In the first days of the war several columns attracted by the brilliant achievements of that corps in the defense of Warsaw, strove for the honor of working with it, and especially with the famous first division, but they found the work too hard, or the conditions too dangerous and after brief periods abandoned the task.

"The Twenty-first flying column which had been with the corps since the end of November, 1914, has proven its worth. It was organized at the expense of a rich patroness, Countess Tolstoy, already famed for the work she has done in the founding of hospitals and feeding points for the sick and wounded. Early in October it did its best work with one of the European corps sent to the relief of Lovitch. At a critical moment, when the enemy had broken through the Russian lines in two places, the column took up its task on its own initiative. The commander, at that time Rasskinoff, dispatched two sections to a neighboring village in charge of Teroitsin, son of the emperor's physician, and myself.

"A diplomat and a student, neither of whom had ever been in war before, could not judge the danger and we rode boldly into the village, half of which had already been occupied by the Germans. The latter opened fire on our sanitary carriages with rapid fire guns. Part of the carriages were destroyed. We recalled our men and started back as fast as we could. The Germans shelled the road over which we rode to our headquarters, but found that the road from Lovitch had been cut. With the wounded we had picked up we had to make a retreat of thirty-five miles in one night, most of the way under the shell fire of the Germans, to Skieraviltze. There we found that the town had been ordered evacuated by the Russian troops and we were practically the only ones left there. A hot fight was in progress outside the city. At the last moment a Russian success on one of the banks saved the city and enabled the Russians to repulse the Germans. Being the only Red Cross unit on the grounds, as the result of a mere chance, we bound and fed, in two days, 3,017 wounded.

"We were ordered then to move on with the corps of the famous General Mishenko, known as the Cossack raider of the Japanese war. We took up our work in his advance lines just at the time the Germans made their second dash on Warsaw. Our corps stood firm for nine days, repulsing attack after attack. This nine days among the Caucasian heroes was the most trying and dangerous, but at the same time the most instructive, of our experiences. In one night 700 wounded were found and cared for, the greater part in the trenches under heavy artillery fire. Several sanitars were wounded.

"When new corps came to the rescue the Caucasians were ordered to make a rapid move back to join fresh troops and begin an advance together. The move was executed so suddenly and rapidly that the military aids had no time to take out the wounded lying in several villages near by. The last section of the column volunteered to creep into the village and rescue the wounded who otherwise were threatened with being burned. Fire having broken out in several places. Through the blackness of the night, lit only by the bursting shells, we made our way into the village and removed eighty men from the darker zone. The staff considered them lost and upon learning of their rescue General Mishenko called out the heroes of that night, thanked them for their work and made them the subject of a flattering order to his regiment. Immediately after that the commander of the column fell ill and I was left in command."

Among the troops whose gallantry stopped the Germans a second time from coming to Warsaw were those of the First Siberian corps.

"For the first time having seen the magnetic Siberian officers," said Kalpaschnikoff, "I decided to offer the services of the column to that brilliant corps. I went to the commander of the corps, General Pleshkoff, who accepted my services. I was fascinated by him, and my impression of him gained that day, as a man beloved by his soldiers, big hearted and fatherly, has never changed."

During the long tenure of the lines to the Bzura river before Warsaw, when the shelling at times was so intense that it seemed to him that no human being could live in the trenches, Kalpaschnikoff and his column took out and cared for several thousands of wounded, victims not only of shelling but of German gases.

Continuing his narration, Commander Kalpaschnikoff said:

"About this time the Prasnitz operation came to a crisis. A blow was necessary to stop the development of the German plan directed on Vilna. The Siberian corps was summoned to start on a few hours notice and proceed by forced marches 137 kilometers to Prasnitz over fearful roads and in wretched weather. Two days were allowed to cover the distance. The world knows of that brilliant dash and what was its result. The military hospital in this rapid march had been left behind. The Twenty-first flying column followed and was the first to enter after the city had been taken by the First and Third Siberian regiments. The sights we saw cannot be adequately described. More than 2,700 wounded Germans without having had any care whatever, were lying or crawling about the streets, asleep in basements and outbuildings, evidently hoping that the Germans would make a counter-attack and recapture the city. The ditches were full of dead and wounded as were the open spaces about the city and the outlying villages. Many of our own men were scattered among the German wounded. We found the work almost beyond our capacity, for from a railroad with the troops always moving on. We formed concentration camps of various points and put students in charge of them. In these camps we collected 3,169 wounded."

To accomplish the rescue Kalpaschnikoff and the student had to crawl more than a mile along a ditch, but in plain view and in constant range of the German trenches, but in the words of Kalpaschnikoff, the Germans soldiers shot rather badly."

After the Germans left Heiloff the population was destitute and facing starvation. The flying column in the succeeding days fed there 22,000 persons besides stamping out an epidemic of typhus fever which for a time threatened to assume large proportions.

TRIMBLE ALLOWANCE DENIED BY COURT

In probate court this morning a motion to set aside an allowance of $75 a month for the widow of Alfred A. Trimble was denied by Judge John Byron Burg.

The will of Edward A. Mann was admitted to probate, Lucy A. Mann being named as executrix.

Hiram J. Barnhart was appointed administrator of the estate of C. J. Frank, his bond being fixed at $4,000.

Claims against the estate of M. L. Custers were approved.

The will of Frank J. Sousa was filed and the hearing set for March 16.

Order was issued for citation to issue to Minnie A. McKee, widow of Frank McKee, to show why claim of H. Huning, amounting to $188 should not be granted.

The bond of Joseph Bavasy as guardian of Elvira Bavasy was approved.

The bond of Joseph Bavasy as administrator of the estate of Josephine Bavasy was approved.

Court adjourned until January 24.

THE SLEEPLESS CAR.

Oh! The tedious, mahogany sleepless car,
Now would the wood were hess,
Or pep'ridge or peach or hemlock or beech,
Slipsery elum or sassafras.

Oh! The green, green plush of the sleepless car!
Now would that the plush were jean
Or denim or duck or ticking or huck
Or mercerized nearsilkine.

Oh! The green, green plush of the sleepless car!
Now would that the green were pink
Or brindle-gray or cob-an-lait
Or the hue of the violet ink.

Oh! The inlaid and filagreed sleepless car!
And now that the snares break loose
or pleasure and give give a ticket to me
On the end of the freight caboose!

THE EXPLANATION.

She—Miss Flirty? Oh! she hasn't the slightest intention of accepting him.

Grandma—Then, why does she encourage him?

She—Well, just now, there is no one else to encourage.

AROUSING HIM.

Dimpleton—It is time to give the baby his milk and the little soul is asleep. I want him to wake naturally.

Dimpleton—That's easy. I'll snore a few times.

New York Stock Exchange.

New York, Jan. 18.—Unsettled shares and industrial specialties were under constant pressure in today's narrow and professional market.

Few features of interest developed in today's early trading, prices showing no material change, except in the special group. Bethlehem Steel rose 5 to 493. United States Steel and leading rails were moderately lower.

Chicago Board of Trade.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—Higher cable quotations put strength today in wheat. A gain in the European visible supply total had only a temporary bearish effect. Opening prices which ranged from ⅛c to ¼c higher with May at $1.29⅛ to $1.29⅜ and July at $1.22⅝ to $1.22¾ were followed by a moderate reaction and then a fresh upturn.

The close was strongest, with May at $1.31⅝ and July at $1.24⅝.

Prospects of larger receipts tended to weaken corn. After opening a shade to ⅛c lower the market rallied to about yesterday's finish.

The close was unsettled at ⅛@⅜c net advance.

Oats showed independent strength. Selling pressure on lard weakened the provisions but at a whole
