and Lusitania cases, denied flatly the contention that the Lusitania was armed and reminded Germany that it was the duty of the United States "to speak with solemn emphasis to call the attention of the imperial German government to the grave responsibility which the government of the United States conceives that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence, and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests." The note averred that the declaration of a submarine war zone could not abrogate the rights of Americans on lawful journeys and renewed the representations of the note transmitted to Germany on May 15.

Germany did not reply until July 8 and the rejoinder was preponderatively characterized by American newspapers, not as a note, but as an address by Foreign Minister von Jagow to the American people. In official circles it was said to come no nearer to meeting the contentions than did the former note. It made a counter proposal that both countries agree upon a certain number of neutral passenger steamers for traffic between the United States and Europe, which sought to avoid recitation of the facts which preceded American condemnation.

With that the negotiations reverted to the Lusitania case. Negotiations were delayed by a seemingly deadlock over the words in which Germany should acknowledge the illegality of the destruction of the line. The Germans, unwilling to use the word "illegal," substituted a declaration that "reprisals must not be directed against other than enemy subjects."

A formal communication, including such a declaration and expressing regret for loss of American lives, assuming liability and offering reparation in the form of indemnity, was submitted to Secretary Lansing.

A favorable settlement of the controversy seemed in high prospect when all progress was reduced to nothing by Germany's declaration of a new submarine policy of sinking without warning all but unarmed merchant ships. That precipitated a new situation. President Wilson decided to close the Lusitania settlement while the other issue was pending, and there the whole matter rested while German submarine warfare was continued and new cases involving loss of American lives piled up.

Finally the accumulation of evidence reached such proportions with the destruction of the Sussex that President Wilson dispatched another note to Germany and went before congress, reviewed the entire situation, and made this declaration:

"I have deemed it my duty to say to the imperial German government that if it is still its purpose to prosecute ruthless and indiscriminate warfare, the government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course to pursue, and that unless the imperial German government should now, immediately, declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, this government can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations altogether."

It will be noted that the president went further than "liners" and said "passenger and freight carrying vessels."

The wording of the note to Germany was almost identical with the foregoing message.

Reviewing the relentless submarine campaign the last note declared:

"No fixed rule of any kind has in fact been set to the indiscriminate pursuit and destruction of merchantmen of all kinds and nationalities within the waters constantly extending where these operations have been carried on, the toll of Americans who have lost their lives on ships thus attacked and destroyed has grown month by month until the ominous total has mounted into the hundreds.

"Again and again the imperial German government has given this government the solemn assurance that at least passenger ships would not be thus dealt with, and yet it has again and again permitted its officers and commanders to disregard those assurances with entire impunity."

The president dispatched the note on the night of April 18 and then addressed congress the following day. Since then the German reply has been awaited.

The German government offered no guarantee against submarine attack provided they carried no contraband.

The nature of the reply was pronounced officially as conclusive evidence that Germany was holding the submarine warfare negotiations as a club over the United States to force this government into some action to compel Great Britain to raise the food blockade. President Wilson steadfastly refused to permit the diplomatic negotiations of the United States with one belligerent to become entangled with the relations with another.

The United States replied on July 21 that the German note was "very unsatisfactory."

The United States it declared was "keenly disappointed." Submarine attacks without warning, and resulting in Americans and other neutrals, were characterized as "illegal and inhuman" and "manifestly indefensible."

The German retaliation against the British blockade, it maintained, must not interfere with the rights of neutrals, which the note declared were "based upon principles, not expediency, and the principles are immutable."

It declared that the United States would continue to contend for the freedom of the seas, "from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost." The American note concluded with these words of warning:

"Friendship itself prompts it (the United States government) to say to the imperial German government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly."

The negotiations at this time were brought into the realm of "informal conversations between Secretary Lansing and Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador. It was thought that much could be accomplished by personal contact which was lost in a cold exchange of documents.

Meanwhile the Arabic was sunk on August 1. It seemed that the United States and Germany had reached the point of a break. Then on September 1, came a riff in the threatening situation. Count von Bernstorff gave the written assurance to Secretary Lansing:

"Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance."

The United States had all along contended not for the safety of "liners" alone, but for the immunity of all peaceful merchant vessels. The word "liners" was the complexing point in Germany's assurances and a complete agreement on what it actually meant never was reached.

More complexities was added to the situation when on October 5 the Arabic case was disposed of by Germany disavowing the sinking and giving to Lansing assurances that submarine commanders had again been instructed to avoid recitation of the acts

Four More Irish Prisoners Shot And Fifteen Are Given Sentences

Joseph Plunkett, Edward Daly, Michael O'Hanrahan and William Pearse Pay Supreme Penalty for Acts.

NATIONALISTS ASK A COMPLETE DISARMAMENT

John McGarry's Reparation Commuted From Death to Eight Years' Imprisonment; Others Get Ten-year Terms.

(By Evening Herald Leased Wire)

Dublin, May 4 (11.10 a. m.).—Four more rebel prisoners were sentenced to death by court martial and shot this morning. This was announced officially. The men are Joseph Plunkett, Edward Daly, Michael O'Hanrahan and Wm. Pearse. Fifteen other rebels were sentenced to death, the official statement adds, but later their sentences were commuted to ten years' penal servitude. Two rebels were sentenced to ten years in prison.

The statement follows:

"The following prisoners, Joseph Plunkett, Edward Daly, Michael O'Hanrahan and William Pearse, were sentenced to death and shot this morning, as the sentence had been confirmed by the general commanding in chief.

"Fifteen others sentenced to death were commuted to ten years' penal servitude. They were: Thomas Bevan, Thomas Walsh, Eamon Lynch, Michael Mervyn, Dennis O'Callaghan, P. F. Sweeny, Patrick McNesty, Peter Clancy, William Tobin, George Irwin, John Doherty, J. J. Walsh, James McLoughlin, J. J. Reid and John Williams.

"Another prisoner, John McGarry, was commuted from death to eight years.

"Two others, Francis Fahey and Richard Dolan, were sentenced to ten years.

Joseph Plunkett, early wounded and shot to death by order of the British government in Dublin Thursday, was one of the seven original signers of the proclamation of the Irish republican government. With Eamon de Valera, also sentenced to death and Thomas J. Clarke and Thomas MacDonagh, he signed the document which was presented to each of the patriots first of the remaining four signers of the proclamation. Plunkett and Joseph Mary Plunkett were married and shortly after Joseph Mary Plunkett, a poet and a Latin scholar, died of consumption, leaving his young wife and three children.

Plunkett was a member of the Irish Volunteers and one of the original Irish Republican Brotherhood.

William Pearse was a brother of Patrick H. Pearse. He was a soldier by profession and was one of the first officers within the Irish Volunteers, of which his brother was head master.

Edward Daly and Michael O'Hanrahan, also among the rebels shot yesterday, have not played prominent parts in the revolutionary movements as former rebel dispatches indicated.

Only one shot has been fired in Dublin since late last night. The military authorities continue to destroy large stockpiles of arms and ammunition.

TRIAL OF CASEMENT WILL BE HELD IN LONDON

London, May 5 (4.20 a. m.).—The trial of Sir Roger Casement will take place in London within a fortnight before three or five judges and a jury. Baron Reading, the lord chief justice of England, probably will preside. The attorney general will conduct the prosecution.

IRISH NATIONALISTS TO ASK FOR DISARMAMENT

London, May 5 (4.55 a. m.).—The Irish Nationalist members of the house will ask parliament to secure the complete disarmament of Ireland. The Nationalist volunteers are willing to hand in their arms if the measure is made general. That the situation in Ireland is still serious is shown by letters from the bishop of Dublin published in this morning's papers, in which he writes:

"Martial law should not be too
