CLASH WITH BANDIT BAND NEAR THE RIO GRANDE RESULTS IN DEATH TO AMERICANS

Trooper and Customs Inspector Killed in Battle With Party of Five from South of River, Believed to be Wiped Out.

CARRANCISTAS SAID TO HAVE AIDED OUTLAWS

Treacherous Shot Accounts for First of United States Casualties; De Facto Forces Fail to Intercept Fugitives.

[By Evening Herald Leased Wire]

El Paso, Tex., July 31.—American soldiers, reinforced by a small detachment of Carranclistas, engaged Mexican bandits who had crossed the Rio Grande into the United States about five miles below Fort Hancock, Texas, fifty-five miles east of here early today. Two Americans were killed and one was wounded, while three of the outlaws were killed and two escaped across the river into Mexico and are now being pursued by Mexican troops and a detachment of the Carranza customs guard.

Upon receiving reports from Roscoe Wood, a United States customs inspector, that the bandits who had committed numerous depredations on the Mexican side of the frontier recently, had crossed the border, six men of troop F of the Eighth United States cavalry, and hospital corps orderly under Lieutenant Charles Terrell, with Wood and Customs Inspector Bean, rode to an abandoned adobe hut where the Mexicans were said to be hiding.

After being surrounded, the bandits opened fire from the building and adjoining outhouses, killing Wood, Private John Twoney and wounding Sergeant Lewis Thompson in the shoulder. Bean, fearing that the Mexicans would escape the small American detachment called upon the Carranclista commander on the opposite side of the river. He responded with a score of soldiers, crossing the river into the United States and taking up position to cut off the outlaws retreat, the incident marking the first time Carranclista soldiers have cooperated with Americans in pursuit of bandits on American soil.

After killing three of the five Mexicans, however, the two remaining bandits closed the American and Carranclista detachments and made their way across the river to the Mexican side, followed by the Mexican detachment soldiers who are pursuing them into the desert to the south.

Detailed reports received here by local customs authorities said that Customs Inspector Wood, assigned to Harris Spur, the first station east of Fort Hancock, received the first news of the presence of the bandits on this side of the river about 4 o'clock this morning. Wood had just been appointed to this post and his duties were to begin today, in the inspection of ore crossing the border there from the San Juan mine on the Mexican side.

Wood received a report from employees of the mine and traced the bandits to an adobe house on the Sartes ranch. He then notified the military authorities who sent a cavalry patrol under Lieutenant Charles Terrell, Eighth cavalry. Wood and Customs Inspector Bean of Fort Hancock acted as guides.

The bandits were surrounded in hour and a half later in the adobe house, but opened fire upon the crowd from the windows. In the first exchange of shots Wood and Twoney fell mortally wounded. While the outlaws held the Americans with their fire, the others escaped and fled across the border.

According to the customs reports, which differed from the earlier military versions in that they said that not four Mexicans made up the band and that the two remaining in the house were killed and that the other two had reached the Mexican side in safety, are now being pursued south into the desert by Carranclista customs authorities reinforced by a small detachment of de facto troops.
