PUBLIC LAND STATES CONGRESS

TO GIVE proper expression to views of the people of the public land states and to place the needs of the men engaged in the work of development of the unclaimed resources of the west and the south, a public land states congress is to be organized in Denver in November.

Delegates from twenty-nine states and the two territories in which are located the public lands held under federal supervision, are to be summoned to attend this congress, and it is intended that the governors of each of the states represented shall also be members of the congress.

Governor George A. Carlson of Colorado has consented to issue the call for the congress that will be its first meeting, Denver having been selected for the first meeting as the most centrally located among the western and southern states where the work of development and the conflict from Washington of the public domain is a vital issue to the congress of the people.

Promoting the examination of the public land laws congress is the feeling that the most important issues of the progress of the states concerned are being controlled by a sentiment regarding conservation which counts on the Atlantic seaboard and practically between Boston and New York only.

This view of the situation which confronts the west and the south was expressed by Vice-President Marshall when he was on the Pacific coast recently, and said that unless the people of the west do some thinking as to what legislation they needed the people of the east would decide for them and make this decision law.

Broadly speaking the difference in the viewpoint of the people of the public land states and of the conservationists in the eastern states where the natural resources of the land have been exploited in private ownership is the difference between sectional and national conservation. Eastern rationalists are and are natural looking up of the resources of the country in reservations under paternalistic control.

According to the proponents of this concept the feeling has been growing in strength in the west that the sentiments of the eastern conservationists in federal legislature is due to the fact that the opinions and wishes of the people of the west and the extreme south have not been sufficiently presented.

For this condition of affairs the point that the people of the public land states are alone to blame, and it is to remedy this condition that the proposed congress is to be called in Denver.

WE REMEMBER JEREMIAH

JEREMIAH A. O'LEARY got the cold shoulder he deserved for his speech insult to the president of the United States. The conference with which the national executive treated his insolent insulter was entirely appropriate, says the Chicago Tribune.

Chicago knows Jeremiah. Chicago remembers Jeremiah on the stage of his multitudinous Chicago life and has written the atmosphere of that memorable day for the shouted denunciations of the president of a country, on the shouted suggestions of Otto Gutheinz that William Jennings Bryan, then secretary of state, should be hanged.

But get courage with a passionate expostulation against the insolence of this Jeremiah O'Leary, sought elsewhere in vain for a place to air his spleen against the leading of an anti-preparedness band. With the hospitableness of the magnet of the fly, the representative of a band of foreign and native born people, Jeremiah O'Leary found a welcome in the office of Secretary Lansing. Secretary Lansing is no longer a Democrat. He is a Republican. Americans doubtless will be glad to know that Secretary Lansing is not an Democrat, and that he will be a candidate for the presidency in 1920.

Jeremiah O'Leary is not a candidate for the presidency. He is not even a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president. He is not even a Democrat. He is a Republican. He is a Republican because he is a traitor to his adopted country.
