AT THE CRYSTAL.—

The Cotton petticoat "fad" of early democratic days, advertising, "more interest and something to talk about" by "Quo Vadis" newly revived and exhumed, he will get all this and more. He will have more thrills than he ever had in any evening in his life. He will behold love that transforms the base metal into pure gold; he will see the downfall of the most autocratic government in modern times and the birth and spread of the Christian Faith.

He will hate the characters of Mr. Nero, the "father of lies," contrasted with that of Nero, the lust and mad career of the Caesars; the beauty of

A SCENE FROM "QUO VADIS"

Lygia's mind and life; throws into high relief for the unscrupulous Poppaea and the simple models of the servant Ursus compared with Chilo, the crafty Greek. He will see Rome burned, the Christians fed to the lions and burned as torches in Nero's gardens. Rouse himself once at their height and the solemnity of the meeting of the early Christians.

"Quo Vadis" will be shown at the Crystal every hours: afternoon and evening, tomorrow and Thursday.

This photo interpretation of Henry Sienkiewicz's novel of Rome in the days of the dissolute Nero when the empire was crumbling into the Christian era was charming, to say the least, a magnificent spectacle but it is well nigh impossible to produce it as a critical time in our nation's history.

"Quo Vadis" shows more clearly than tongue can relate or pen can portray the result of autocratic governments and military rule. It is an unanswerable appeal for world democracy.

The story follows very closely the plot of Sienkiewicz's novel, opening in the private court of Petronius, a Roman patrician who, even in these profligate days, refuined his feasts, epicurean and philosophy. There enters Petronius' nephew, Vinitius, has returned from war in Asia Minor. He falls in love at his face for Lygia, the daughter of a barbarian king who is held a hostage in Rome and who has been converted to Christianity.

Taking up the thread of young Vinitius' love story, we are led by it through the all-night orgies of the royal mansions in Nero's palace, to the arena where the contests between the gladiators are held, to the secret meeting place of the small band of Christians, whose leader is the Apostle Peter. Let us look again to the home of Peter, his "martyrs and prisoners" where we have an intimate view of the lives and customs of those days.

Douglas Fairbanks will be seen at the Pastime theater in a new Triangle picture, entitled "Headin' South," today and tomorrow. It is a North versus South picture, dealing with the problem of the Southern—Mexican and Caballero dealing with the problem of a notorious band of Mexicans who defy all laws and governmental authority.

Fairbanks is an expert horseman, and his roping scenes at the head of the cowboys are intended to rival the most blase patron of a theater. The real Mexican border at Nogales was selected as the background for "Headin' South," disclosing views of conditions that will cause endless comment.

For these scenes a special train was chartered from Los Angeles to Nogales which included eight Pullmans and twelve freight cars, transporting over two hundred people and an equal number of horses, among which was "Stubbs," the famous Fairbanks pony, who has a number of amusing scenes.

"Roger" the Alaskan sledhound, who is Fairbanks' favorite dog, was taken on the trip and on several occasions was given up for lost. When he was on a hunt for prairie dogs.

BULGARIAN SOLDIERS NOT SENT TO WESTERN FRONT, CONSUL ADVISES

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Washington, April 2.—A report to the state department from Consul General Murphy at Sofia declared that no Bulgarian troops were moved to the western front for the big German offensive. It has been stated that Bulgarians were fighting in the west alongside Germans and Austrians.

MISS WILSON SEES DIVISIONAL REVIEW AT CAMP FUNSTON

President's Daughter Witnesses the Inspiring Spectacle of Thousands of Troops on the March; Gives Two Fine Concerts.

(Union Pacific News Bureau.)

Camp Funston, Kan., April 2.—In their first big divisional review, the thousands of troops from Camp Funston marched last week before Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the president, Generals Hulen, Wint and Hanson, Governor Allen of Kansas, Congressman Anthony and Adjutant General Dickman of Colorado.

The review of the north of the Fort Riley reservation was the scene of the home coming of troops, the men of Colonel Mosley, engineers and signal troops with all of the attendant wagons and thick trains reaching for miles across the hills. With flags flying and bands playing at the regimental "Pass in review," each battalion swung into the line of march extending full over the parade and in front of the reviewing officers.

Miss Wilson was not with the main portion of the reviewing party. The president's daughter arrived late and had her car parked inconspicuously to one side as the mobile west's army of democracy which had been raised at her father's call, swung past in full equipment for service.

The big troop movement to the flats some six miles out from Funston commenced early in the morning, several trains being followed by the army organizations to avoid congestion. Once on the ground they were formed in two great lines, in one the infantry, engineers and signal troops being parked, and the second being composed of mounted troops and trains. New units kept arriving over the hills from the camp even while half of the long column had passed the reviewing party, but so perfectly had the event been planned, as each later organization pulled into its appointed position on schedule time it went forward and wheeled into the moving line in its proper place.

The troops carried full field service equipment. Immediately after passing in review, each organization pulled ahead on the double quick, leaving the line and proceeding to the place for its afternoon inspection. By noon, the entire column had passed and the plain as far as the eye could see was covered with divisional troops, motor trucks and supply wagons by the hundred, were parked in long lines in various parts of the field, shelter tents were erected to form scores of camps in which the troops ate lunch and afterward prepared for the approach of the inspecting officer.

Miss Wilson, who was the guest of Mrs. General Frank L. Winn, was most interested in this portion of the day's events. She saw everything the soldiers own, from blankets to toothbrushes, brought out and laid in front of the shelter tents in regulation order. She saw the men who had come here a few months ago as raw civilians and who had just marched past as trained soldiers, stand at attention before their equipment, exemplifications, as she pointed out, of the old army adage that the neatest men are the best fighters.

Taking part in the review were the 57th infantry brigade, composed of the 353d, 354th infantry and the 341st machine gun battalion. The 158th infantry brigade was composed of the 353th and 356th infantry and the 342d machine gun battalion. The 184th artillery brigade was made up of the 349th, 341st and 342d field artillery. Other organizations in line were the 340th machine gun battalion, 339th engineers, 339 field signal battalion, 339d field sanitary battalion, 339th ammunition train, 339th supply train, 339th engineers train, 339th sanitary train and the 164th depot brigade. While taking no active part in the review, a large portion of the 368 colored division men and officers were brought out to watch it.

Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the president, gave two concerts while at Camp Funston, one being for the men in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium and the other for the officers in the officers' Y. M. C. A. building. Her appearances were held under the auspices of the war work council of the Y. M. C. A. While at Funston she was the guest of Mrs. General Frank L. Winn and was entertained at several affairs given in her honor.

Through the innovation of a training schedule introduced by Lieut. Col. M. L. Crimmins at the detention camp at Funston in which newly arrived men spend their first two weeks, the hardest part of the breaking in from civilian to soldier life is eliminated. The camp has been made, in effect, a training school for the new men, giving them through lectures and practical drill application, the rudiments of the problems they will take up in detail later in their training.

The days are dividing up into fourteen half hour periods, alternating drill, lectures and other duties, the object being to encourage mental alertness and enthusiasm, keep up interest and instruct the men without causing the physical and mental fatigue that the unaccustomed civilian usually encounters in entering the army.

The lectures laid out by Col. Crimmins explain themselves. Some of them are: Military courtesy; loyalty and obedience; rights and duties, personal sanitation and care of the feet, leadership and team work, advise to the soldier, including care of equipment, shoes and mess outfit, and many others that give the new men the proper groundwork for what they will encounter later.

The training at the detention camp makes the men realize the value and necessity of snappy discipline and cleanliness. By the time they join the organization to which they are assigned they will have learned the theory and some of the practice of soldiering, and will know where to look for additional information should they care to study further. They will have been "broken in." Through Col. Crimmins' methods, the change from civilian to soldier life comes easily, and the men will leave the camp not only prepared and ready but in most cases enthusiastic, for the intensive training which will make them fit soldiers of democracy.

Held by the army Y. M. C. A. in conjunction with the military authorities, the Easter services held in the natural amphitheatre on this hillside at Funston presented a spectacle of note. On the hillside was erected a cross, on which was draped the flag of Belgium, typifying the crucifixion of that land at the hands of the Huns. When the bugles sounded the army call to worship, the color bearers of all of the regiments marched through the assembled men, and planted their flags around it in significance of the part they will play, while the assemblage sang "Onward Christian Soldiers." The speaker, Dr. Lincoln McConnell of Atlanta, Ga., was introduced by Brigadier General Winn. Many civilians were numbered among the thousands who took part in the impressive event.

RAPID DESTRUCTION OF AIRPLANES CALLS FOR BOOSTING OUTPUT

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

London, April 2.—How necessary and rapid building of airplanes is can be gathered from the official reports of losses on all battle fronts during February. These totalled 361 of which 268 fell on the western front, 85 in Italy, three in Palestine, three in Macedonia and one in Mesopotamia.

The allies report that 273 German and Austrian machines were brought to earth by enemy airmen, while the German headquarters claim to have brought down 88 allied machines on the various fronts. Losses for December on the western and Italian fronts alone were 590.
