The following is an extract from an interview with General Crook by a representative of the Albuquerque Journal:

Reporter—How about the Mexican troops?

Crook—The Apaches laugh at them. A regiment of cavalry and one of infantry have been operating against them all summer, and have not killed a single Indian. We, with our small force, have killed over forty.

Crook's reputation for truth and veracity has always been looked upon with suspicion, especially since his notoriously lying story of his Sierra Madre campaign. This last lie of his about the "killing of over forty" Indians, carries off the prize and accords him a place with Eli Perkins and Joe Mulhatton. The only difference between these two men and Crook is that their lies are harmless, while his are criminal. He had better make arrangements to recover the reward offered by the citizens of Cochise county, Arizona, if his troops have "killed over forty" Indians during the summer. Even in this he proves himself to be a liar. He claims that there never has been over forty-two bucks off the reservation during the last raid. If his gallant troops have killed all but two of them and he has been obliged to call on the governors of the territories for aid in hunting down those, it does not speak well for Crook, admitting this. Those two remaining Indians have made themselves terribly numerous on the Gila during the past week. Now, General, you old lying fraud, why haven't you the manhood to come out and resign, and admit that if you ever was of any account as an Indian fighter, you have lost your grip? Give some military man a chance who will not allow the Indians to dictate terms to him, as you did when they had you in the nine-hole in the Sierra Madres. You have humbugged the public long enough. Give an Indian fighter a chance.

I think it appropriate to suggest that a resolution be presented in the House of Congress asking that of the army and celebrate. It is certain that General Sheridan is exerting every nerve in Crook's behalf, and it is almost certain that an inquiry would show him up in his true light. It is reported that Lieutenant Britton Davis might furnish evidence that would prove that General Crook is indirectly responsible for the present outbreak. Davis resents his resignation has not been given, and it is not improbable that a little light might possibly be thrown on the matter, probably to Crook's detriment.—Silver City Enterprise.

Fatal Quarrel.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 19.

A Chattanooga, Tennessee, special dispatch to the Post Dispatch says. A very sensational murder occurred a few miles from Somerville yesterday. Two gentlemen, named Wesley Hopper and J. Fitzgeraldson, had a fierce quarrel about the division of a piece of property. Blows followed, and Hopper being the more powerful of the men, seized Fitzgeraldson in his arms and deliberately cut his throat from ear to ear four times. The murderer was arrested.

A Terrible Tragedy.

LINCOLN, Oct., 19.

The house and cattle barn, belonging to Peter Hingan, living near Ithaca, twenty five miles north of here, was burned last night. Hingan was away from home at the time. The remains of his daughter were found in the barn. There are wild rumors afloat as to the cause of the tragedy. The prevailing opinion is that young Hingan murdered the woman and child and then fired the premises and suicided.
