CLEANING UP COLUMBUS

Starting early last week, William Cooper, acting under instructions, notified the various salamanders, preacers and in fact all irregular establishments whose orders are sold, that women and street walkers were unnecessary. In the fine in stances necessary, the orders were readily complied with.

The residents meetings were looked after by Mr. Coleman from a military point of view and all the houses and refuse piles were on early hand with disinfectants.

Morally the city is undergoing a general change for the better. With the exemplars of the Army and civilian authorities, the city authorities virtually agree to close to reports from the present mayor's office as to who are undesirables and vagrant homeowners. These class will be immediately arrested and fined or deported.

WERE PEDESTRIANS NOT PRESBYTERIANS

[By Associated Press.]

LONDON, April 3.—(By mail.)—A policeman giving evidence at the Willesden police court against a man charged with begging said he had told the prisoner stop "right Presbyterian."

"How did you know their religion?" asked the magistrate.

"They were passerby," answered the policeman.

"You mean they were pedestrians?"

"That's the word, sir," said the witness.

Lion Meat Not Popular.

PARIS, April 16.—(By mail.)—A music hall favorite she read him for her luncheon here recently at a social gathering at Montmartre. The dish was interspersed between frogs and snails, but according to an epicure who attended the lion filet will never become popular. The animal, a young lioness, known as Mascot to a local menagerie, was accidentally killed by her trainer. The meat was said to be "tasteless and stringy."

He was a misfit Earl, but a perfect lover—and scrapper. Anyhow, you can expect a man fresh from the open plains of the great West to act like a Chesterfield when he finds a little thrust upon him. But you do expect a redblooded Westerner to be a perfect lover and a heaven of a scrapper. And Louis Bennison in "A Misfit Earl" certainly runs true to form. Don't miss this new Bennison gloom chaser. Five reels of roughriding romance and whirlwind fun.

A FRANKLIN STORY

Marty Somerville lives with her good people on a little farm in the mountains. She is a child of a widow who owns three farms, all heavily as mortgaged and mad. The old folks pass away and Marty, with Fannie Perkins, a middle-aged teacher, leave Kentucky for every wages to go in search of her grandmother to whom she finds a clue in her mother's DIARY. She reaches the Burnes home in New York, but leaves this out a vague association of the woman, but the grandmother of the father's late husband. Mrs. Burnes was the second wife and has one son by a former marriage Eric, an artist who is home on furlough. Eric and Marty fall in love, but the mother is anxious to get rid of Marty because she is really part princess in the estate.

When Marty learns that Eric is engaged to a wealthy girl she goes back to the farm. There he seeks her out with his chauffeur, who has been stolen by the charms of the aged teacher. So all four find their hearts desire, the mother repents of her recent decision and all ends happily. At the Orpheum tonight.

FROM A DESERT TO A GARDEN CITY

[By Associated Press.]

LONDON, April 15.—(By mail.)—The "plague of beggars" seems to be decreasing in Madrid, now one of the most rapidly developing cities in Europe. The only city in Spain with a fast railway service in all directions, Madrid apparently is acquiring control of the business of the whole country and money is being lavishly spent on improvements, writes the correspondent of the Daily Mail.

Great avenues are being driven athwart the old narrow streets. The rapid growth of her population and widening of thoroughfares mean displacement of residential streets. New buildings being erected are said to be among the finest structures in Europe.

Middle-class Madrid, the correspondent says, is moving to the outskirts, and in the arid desert is arising a garden city.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 1.—The two Mexicans who were arrested here yesterday were released this afternoon on orders from the Department of Justice.

Suits for Wear and Tear

IN choosing a suit for spring the first point to decide is the sort of service expected of it. If ability to stand wear and tear is the main consideration, both materials and design must be carefully chosen, and there are numbers of new models that promise to be as efficient as they are attractive. The choice of a new suit depends, too, upon what one already has in a one-piece dress or suit—we rarely recommend to be of a little different character, than those we now observe variations in the new models. The radical new departures in style are to be found in formal suits, while those for general wear vary as medium, but able to the tastes for street wear—simplicity and true lines. The very practical efficient of the tailor, show what may be expected when a doubled cloth from the several worthy suitings of these models, a checked wool in brown and black, has a skirt that surmount a very little toward the bottom and closes with a wide overlapping waist at the back. Six bone buttons set on this seam, above the hem, finish the story of the skirt, which is really always kept this spring. The coat is more interesting. By means of folds cut on the bias, it accomplishes a pointed effect with a wide border at the bottom of the box coats. Folds extend from this border over the shoulders and down the front, and make the military collar and turnabouts cuffs. The belt now finds both straight and bias and in two widths and positions to be very characteristic, yet, together with bow buttons, remaining in novelty.

Crepe jersey, noted in itself, makes a good beginning for the straight-line suit in gray which the picture sets forth so clearly. A handsome suit wore, with it is comfortable for early spring and easily paired with in warm weather.
