Speaking of Bridesmaids

A PRETTY and conservative dress of net and silk taffeta, to be worn over a colored underslip, is an American design that will commend itself to the bridesmaid as a fine wedding dress. This same dress with white underslip, will interest the bride who does not want a conventional wedding dress, but does wish to be married in white, requiring only that her frock be pretty and dress practical enough to be some good after the wedding. There are many white dresses—of georgette, voile, crepe de chine, net or organdy that such a bride may choose and one of some kind is nearly always a part of them. In making a selection for a bride one must remember to look for distinct designs, for the bridesmaids dress is not so important.

The dress shown above has an underskirt of pink net with a wide hem; over this there is a tunic of lace bordered and ring dyed opals, set on at the sides, behind drapery of pink net, with a narrow frill at the hip. The lace is used for the kimono sleeves, also at the sides and back with a "V" shaped piece of pink net. The three quarter length sleeves are finished with pointed flounces of net edged with narrow lace, lace and the girdle is made of white satin ribbon. For a bridesmaid the girdle will be in the color used for the underslip and will be pretty if finished with a large flat blossom made of the ribbon.

There is nothing prettier or more practical than taffeta in light, flowing colors for bridesmaids' dresses and they are enchanting when quaint styles are chosen for them and worth or bitten of tulle worn with them. It is to be noted that the American bride follows the lead of fancy. There is nothing like taffeta for freshness and serviceableness. Sometimes it serves as a foundation for much silk tulle drapery and frosts simply by being in a pleasing tinted shades. There is very choice of colors when taffeta is chosen for bridesmaids and we get fresh at the wedding rights in taffeta offering the greatest gift of satisfaction and pleasure.
