A Good Man Gone.

Max Richards, who was loved and respected by all who knew him—and his acquaintances were legion—died last Wednesday morning, after a long illness. For years he had been a sufferer from the dread disease—consumption, but not until recently did his condition give cause to suspect fatal results. For the last week of his life his condition gradually grew worse and his friends were not surprised when the end came. Everything that medical science could do, was done for Max by his friends who were faithful to the last. The funeral took place from the residence of P. Cazabon, on the corner of International street and Nelson avenue at 4 p. m., Wednesday.

Max Richards was born in Paris, France, and was 53 years of age. He was an expert book-keeper and accountant, and was possessed of many sterling qualities. It is said that no man ever, when in distress, asked of Max Richards that he did not receive. May the recording angel deal as fairly with Max as he has dealt with his fellows.

Wanted Revenge.

Walter and Joe, two employes of rival grocery stores in Nogales, for a month past have been thirsting for the blood of each. Last Monday morning Walter met Joe alone in the suburbs of the city, near the round house. Walter asked Joe if he remembered that he (Joe) was a son of canine – not of the male gender. This was too much for Joe, so he immediately—to the great surprise of Walter, who never suspected he would resent an insult, because he had gone Scott-free many times for the same offense—took Master Walter by the neck and from the evidence introduced Monday at Joe's trial, gave him a good trouncing. The fight lasted only a minute and it is a certainty that had Master Joe imagined he could win so easily without receiving fatal injuries in the encounter with Walter he would have brought things to a focus a month ago.

Joe was satisfied with the shaking he had given Walter and thought by squaring himself with the law for losing his temper all would be well. He went to a justice of the peace who accepted $5.50, supposing same would equalize matters with Walter. Not so, that young man wanted revenge and insisted that Joe be tried, sentenced and shot for assaulting him.

The justice decided in Walter's favor, returned Joe's $5 50 and told him to prepare to meet Walter in the court room. Joe was paralyzed. He had paid his money and thought the machinery of the law had passed the danger line.

When he found he was in for it, he secured the services of Frank J. Duffy to manage things for him. Duffy demanded a jury trial, which was granted and Tuesday afternoon set for the final struggle.

This last contest lasted about as long as the first. The children told their troubles, the judge told the jury it was "up to them." They were out about a minute and the county is out the costs. They brought in a verdict for Joe and thereby saved him $5.50 which the evening before he thought he had lost forever.
