OMAHA BREVITIES.

—The advance guard of the Hayden expedition went west yesterday.

—Wm. H. Frithean and Valencia E. Rice were made one yesterday morning at the Probate Court.

—Judge Lake has postponed final action upon the Ketcham appeal, until July 27, when the court reconvenes.

—Several prisoners charged with minor criminal offenses, were sentenced by Judge Lake yesterday afternoon.

—Saturday evening quite a display of fire-works was made by Max Myer & Co., and the Variety Bazar.

—A grocery team ran away yesterday on 9th street, demoralizing some groceries and splintering the wagon tongue.

—The C. & N. W. Railroad have accepted the new Iowa law, and telegraphed the agent here to charge three cents per mile to all points in that State.

—The Milos were ignominuously defeated in their match game on the Fourth, with the Quicksteps, of Council Bluffs. Score, 30 to 13.

—Last Friday Pat Powers had his nose bitten off in a melee with one Shields. Dr. Bailey was called and the parted member was stuck together. Pat nose how it is himself.

—The friends of Rev. J. H. Presson propose giving him a donation at the Second M. E. Church, corner of Twenty-first and Izard streets, on Wednesday evening next. A cordial invitation is extended to the public.

—John Chinaman complained to Judge Wilbur, Saturday, of several urchins putting fire crackers in his pocket. It being Fourth of July mitigated the offense, and Mr. Chop Sticks went unavenged.

—At the Florence picnic on Saturday a lively hair-pulling match took place between a married woman and a young girl. The married woman came out ahead. A man, as as usual, was at the bottom of the affair.

—Two balloons were sent up on Sixteenth street, Saturday evening, by Messrs. Lemon, St. Gwyer and Edwards. The last seen of the twelve-footer was when it was sailing around the moon over at Council Bluffs.

—Walter Wilkins met with a severe accident while attempting to get on the Glenwood excursion train Saturday. He missed his hold and was thrown heavily to the track. His hands and face were severely bruised, and he narrowly escaped being run over.

—The Government transportation contract, for transporting 1,000,000 pounds of army supplies from the southern terminus of the Utah Southern to the Post of Beaver, Utah, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, was awarded to Gordon & Co., at $1.25 per hundred pounds.

—On the 3d of July evening at least one hundred and fifty assembled at the spacious residence of Mr. and Mrs. McClain, to attend their 20th anniversary-wedding. A splendid set of china was presented by their Methodist friends. Rev. Mr. Presson made the presentation speech, which was responded to by Mr. McClain in eloquent words. At 12 M. the party dispersed, having enjoyed an unusually pleasant time.

—D. C. Sutphen had a narrow escape from being killed yesterday afternoon. The large sign of Murphy, insurance agent, fell and struck Mr. Sutphen on the head. A stiff crowned hat parried the blow, and Mr. Sutphen escaped with a bruised shoulder and a sore head. But for the plug hat he would have been converted into a cocked hat, and Omaha would have lost a valuable member of her valuable City Council.

—Sunday evening as the family of the Rev. Father Hammond were entering the St. Barnabas Church, one of the household dropped dead on the threshold. The deceased was known to a large circle of acquaintances, and it was impossible for them to conceal the evidences of their emotion. He was of unimpeachable integrity and a full-blooded Newfoundland.

—The Maennerchor Society had a delightful picnic at the Union Brewery Grove on the Fourth of July. Over three hundred persons were present, and a general good time was had, the amusements being games and sports of various kinds, gymnastics by the Turners, dancing, etc., etc. No disturbances of any kind marred the pleasures of the day, and everything passed off pleasantly. The ball of the Society in the evening at Shoaf's hall, though not largely attended, was thoroughly enjoyed by those who attended.

—The city editor of the BEE after getting up the local for last evening's issue, grabbed up his collar-box and left on the 3 o'clock C. B. & Q. train for the East for a week's visit in Chicago, and Racine, Wis- [torn] and a half

DEATH OF BISHOP O'GORMAN.

James Michael O'Gorman, Roman Catholic Bishop of Nebraska, died in this city on Saturday last, at 1:30 p. m., after a very brief illness, at the age of 65 years, having been born in the county of Limerick, Ireland, in 1809. His parents were of noble ancestry, and, strange as it may seem, many of his nearest relatives were Protestants, two of his brothers being Orangemen.

After receiving a very liberal education, young O'Gorman at the age of 19 entered the monastry of Mount Melarry, County of Waterford, under the auspices of the Trappists, one of the most austere and self-abnegating of the monastic orders.

In due course of time he was ordained priest, and in 1830 he was sent on a mission to America, to establish a branch of the Trappist order, which he located near Dubuque, Iowa, giving it the name of New Mellary.

Here he remained until the spring of 1859, when he came to Nebraska, having been consecrated Vicar Apostolic of this See on the 8th of May of that year.

During the fifteen eventful years that since elapsed Bishop O'Gorman devoted his whole energy to the building up of the Catholic Church not only in this city and State, but also directing his labors to the more distant territories West.

Imbued with a deep and devotional piety, and endowed with a kindly heart, this venerable prelate was ever ready to sacrifice comfort and self-interest in the noble cause of religion and humanity. His benevolence knew no bounds, and his charity was not confined to creed or sect.

To his untiring efforts we may ascribe the location, in our midst, of those models of human patience and benevolence, the Sisters of Mercy, and to him is due the credit of that noble institution, the Omaha Mercy Hospital.

Bishop O'Gorman also founded Mt. St. Mary's Convent in this city. With all his religious zeal and his vigorous monastic training, Bishop O'Gorman was one of the most liberal of churchmen. When the great council of Bishops was held at Rome, he was found with the very few intrepid prelates who cast their vote against the dogma of papal infallibility. After his return to America, when the infallibility dogma was promulgated, Bishop O'Gorman with the others who had opposed the measure gave his cordial acquiescence. Whether as a churchman or a citizen, Bishop O'Gorman enjoyed the universal veneration of all the people who came in contact with him. His gentle, unaffected manner, and his affable bearing, gave him easy access to every body's confidence. His demise will be deeply lamented by all our citizens, but especially by the faithful flock that habitually looked to him for fatherly consolation and advice.

The remains of the Bishop will be removed from the Episcopal residence to-morrow at 6 a. m., and laid in state in the Cathedral, where the religious offices prescribed by the Catholic ritual will be performed.

The last requiem mass will be said between 9 and 10 a. m. by the bishops and priests. After this the corpse will be subject to a farewell look to all who may desire. The body will thereafter be deposited with customary rites in the vault erected under the high altar.

—It has been customary in other cities on similar occasions, for the business community, as a mark of respect, to a deceased Prelate, to suspend business for an hour or two during the performance of the funeral ceremony.

Bishop O'Gorman quite apart from his rank in the Church was one of Omaha's oldest and most influential pioneers. We would therefore suggest that the public accord to him the same honors that some are paid elsewhere to eminent men and honored citizens.

Their Little Programme Didn't Pan Out Well.

Too Much Beer the Cause of Several Fights and a Pitched Battle between the Granger boys and the "Townies."

The Start—The Trip—The Artful dodge of the "Kunning Ko-ops," &c.

At half-past ten o'clock Saturday morning a train of ten coaches and three baggage cars, having on board about 1,000 persons, men, women and children, left the Union Pacific depot for the Granger celebration of the national holiday at the Elkhorn river bridge. The Trades Unions were largely represented, and about 75 of the "Ko-ops" were observed to be among the excursionists, the remainder of the party being made up of citizens generally. Before and after the train started the leading "Ko-ops" such as Strickland, Hascall, Dudley, Pratt, H. B. Myers, Ijams, Johnson, Balcombe, Lee, and Frank Walters, busied themselves in distributing blood-red badges, having on them the words "Council of Industry, No. 1." A large number of persons pinned these badges on their garments, and thus an impression was made upon those who were not so well posted as the key-hole reporter of the BEE, that the "Ko-ops" were three or four hundred strong. This was a cunning device of the "Ko-ops" to deceive the Grangers as to their real strength, but the scheme of the artful dodgers failed in its desired end, for soon quite a number of the badge-bearers—those who were not "Ko-ops" —took off the blood-red ribbons, when they discovered the fraud, and cast them out of the windows. The "Ko-op" force thus dwindled down very materially, and when the train arrived at its destination, they didn't "loom up" in numbers one-tenth as much as they had expected. This was their first sad disappointment, which reminded Gen. Strickland of those saddest words of tongue or pen, "it might have been."

The ride from Omaha was a pleasant one, and was enjoyed by all. The rich waving fields of grain, the high corn, and other crops, afforded a pleasing sight to the eye, and gave evidence of an abundant harvest. One of the "Ko-ops" manifested a great deal of curiosity in regard to the corn and rye; he had often seen them "raised" at Capt. Lee's saloon, the headquarters of the "Sons of Toil," but that was the first time in his industrious life that he had ever seen corn and rye in such a questionable shape. Another "Ko-op," who had been a farmer once, warned him not to further expose his ignorance concerning farm products, as the Grangers might give him the "grand bounce."

AT THE GROVE.

On arrival at the bridge the excursionists disembarked, and were received by the Granger Marshals of the day. A line was formed, and the procession in straggling order marched to the grove, where a speakers' and musicians' stand had been erected, a large dancing platform laid down, seats put up, a well sunk, swings hung from the tall trees, and other necessary arrangements made. The grove in itself, was very pleasant and shady, being on the bank of the Elkhorn river; but one impediment was the lack of grass, and the superabundance of sand, which filled the ladies' shoes full, while the numerous sand-burs stuck to them closer than their escorts and more firmly than postage stamps to an envelope.

The crowd, including "Ko-ops," Trades' Unionists, and excursionists generally, from Omaha and elsewhere, numbered from 2,000 to 2,500.

The Grange officials were: President, H. M. Goff; Secretary, S. J. Cutler; Marshall, W. R. Turner; Assistant Marshals, S. J. Cutler, J. A. Grifin, Fred. Stabri, and T. Thomas.

The Grange societies present were Commercial Grange No. 224, Gregg school house, McArdle precinct; Dryden Grange No. 501, Glandt's school house, McArdle precinct; Waterloo Grange, No. 200, Waterloo, Valley precinct; Iron Bluffs Grange No. 340, Iron Bluffs school house, Chicago precinct; Elkhorn City Grange No. 152; Millard Grange No. 385; Valley Grange No. 204, Valley precinct; Empire Grange No. 572, Sarpy county; Pleasant Prairie No. 432, Douglas county.

THE IMPUDENCE OF THE KO-OPS, AND HOW THEY WERE SNUBBED.

The key-hole reporter of the BEE, as well as several other lookers-on from Omaha, could not help but observe the artful manœuvers of the members of the "Co-operative Union of Farmers and Mechanics, No. 1, of Omaha," and most amusing were the actions of such "noble farmers and mechanics," and "industrious cusses," as Gen. Strickland, Hascall, Judge Dudley, Anti-Monopolist Balcombe, H. B. Myers, Frank Walters, Mills, the poor [torn]n's friend, air-castle Johnson, [torn] Pratt, the "Ko-op" [torn] in that mag-

Ministers and angels of grace defend us! from the machinations of such political bummers, wire-pullers and standing candidates!

The Ku-Klux Ko-ops leaders went to Elkhorn with the determination of capturing the Grangers. They had made out a complete programme, which they intended to have carried into effect to attain their desired end. Strickland, Gwyer, and Hascall, were to have been called on for speeches, at the proper time. D. H. Pratt was to have been called out to read a lengthy "pome," written by himself expressly for the occasion. School teacher Wright, from Saratoga, Pratt, and two others, forming a quartette, were to have sung by special request, by koorse, the ode of the "Ko-ops," written to order by Pratt, and arranged to the tune of "Wearing of the Green." Chaplain Saint A. D. Balcombe, was to have offered up one of his sublime prayers; and Frank Walters, if the patience of the Grangers would stand it, was to have been allowed an opportunity to extinguish himself. Such was the plan of the "Ko-ops" to gull and deceive the Grangers, but it didn't pan out worth a cent. They came, they saw, and they went home disgusted at their defeat, which was accomplished in a most genteel manner.

But let us return to the performance of the political acrobats and tumblers. Before the Grange celebration began the key-hole reporter of the BEE noticed that the speakers' stand had been taken possession of by the leading "Ko-ops." Gen. Strickland paced up and down like a proud African lion, imagining himself "the king of the forest," "the hero of the hour." Occasionally he would stop, strike an imposing attitude, run his hand through his hair, survey the assemblage with a haughty and contemplative eye, no doubt thinking himself the "observed of all observers," and indulging in the thought, "this is the way that Stephen A. Douglas got into Congress, and this is the manner in which I shall have glory." Occasionally he would sandwich these little promenades and attitudes with a surprise party of cold water from the invited speakers' pitcher, thus hoping to cause them to dry up and give him a chance to be called out to do some spouting. It was amusing, to say the least.

Pratt likewise paced the platform with one hand in his coat tail pocket, holding that "pome," and the other stroking his majestic beard, which, more than anything else, would convey the impression that he was another "lion of the hour."

Air-castle Johnson "loomed up" on the platform, as also occasionally did ex-Governor Hascall, Judge Dudley, and Wright, and others.

The keen Grangers, however, penetrated the designs of the "Ko-ops," held a short consultation, and then had it announced from the stand that they wished it "to be distinctly understood that this was to be an exclusively Granger celebration."

The announcement fell like a bombshell among the "Ko-ops," and the explosion caused a general scattering of them. Strickland slipped quietly away and took a drink at the pump. He was completely dumbfounded, and the remainder of the day he kept shady. Dudley and Johnson squatted beneath a distant grape vine to console each other. Pratt took his "pome" and put it into the inside pocket of his vest, so that he would not lose it, and Walters followed Gen. Strickland to the pump to soak his head.

"General" said he, "how are the mighty fallen. You said in your Omaha speech repeatedly, that we should all have glory; but the question now is, how the d—l are we going to get it? This is the day on which we were all to have loomed up like sun-flowers, but the Grangers have wilted us like the morning-glory beneath the burning sun."

"Oh, give us a rest," said Strickland, "we may catch them yet."

"Well," replied Walters," I am afraid that the stuffing has been knocked out of our scheme. But, although we have been badly bruised, we are still in the ring."

The couple then pre-empted a sand-hill, and seated themselves, like any other invited guests. The remainder of the "Ko-op" outfit dispersed likewise, all being very much discomfited.

THE GRANGER CELEBRATION

finally began, Mr. H. N. Goff, the president, calling the assemblage to order. After some refreshing music by the band, John Rush eloquently read the Declaration of Independence. Mr. John N. Crawford delivered a lengthy oration, which as a literary effort was very creditable, but owing to the weakness of his voice, it was appreciated only by the few who had the pleasure of being near enough to hear him.

Major J. W. Davis followed with a speech of considerable length, which became rather monotonous, especially as it was entirely of a political character.

This concluded the exercises, and the "Ko ops" were not given the slightest opportunity to carry their programme into execution.

DANCING AND OTHER AMUSEMENTS

began about 2 o'clock, after the picnickers had paid their compliments to the lunch baskets, and the various refreshment stands. A general good time was had by the dancers, as the music was excellent, and the platform sufficiently large to accommodate all who wished to dance.

Other amusements were numerous and were heartily enjoyed by all. Delightful promenades were indulged in; the swings were kept in constant motion; and flirtation tete a tetes beneath the spreading shade trees had an irresistible attraction for many. The river afforded an opportunity for bathing [torn] Judge Porter, especial- [torn] ement, having come well provided with fishing tackle for all who wished to cast a line.

The Grangers made every effort to entertain their guests in a handsome and hospitable manner, and they certainly succeeded.

FURTHER CONCERNING THE KO-OPS.

The "Ko-ops," after having been outwitted, made up their minds to amuse themselves as best they could. Some took advantage of the occasion to make the acquaintance of many of the Grangers. General Strickland was introduced to one Granger, who complimented him very highly on his celebrated 'glory' speech. Chaplain Balcombe's prayer was praised by another. Hascall was asked what kind of a squash he was; while Pratt was hauled over the coals for being a Grand Island and Niobrara railroad monopolist; and Dudley and Johnson, as grand national officers of the "Ko-ops," were introduced considerably, if not more so, but they all felt so down in the mouth, that it could be plainly seen that they were far from being at ease.

The BEE reporter, in conversation with several prominent Grangers, learned that the "Ko-ops" had no more to do with that excursion train than the Grangers had, as the Union Pacific had put it on, and charged so much per head. This knocks the underpinning from the "Ko-ops'" statement that they had exclusive control of the train. The "Ko-ops" had been invited only as other guests, and not to take any leading part in the exercises. The leaders of these "Protectors of Industry" were regarded with suspicion by the Grangers generally, who have got their eyes open, and are not to be hoodwinked. The only conclusion to be arrived at is that the "Ko-ops" have seen their best days, and that the "Fourth of July" collapse of their air-castle balloon will wind up their career.

PUGILISTIC.

During the afternoon too much beer was the means of raising several fights, which caused considerable excitement as well as amusement. The first fight occurred at a beer stand between some city boys, who are known as hard cases, and a broad-shouldered Granger. A dispute arose between them over some trivial matter, when he applied to one of them an opprobrious epithet. One city boy grabbed up a beer glass and hit him on the upper lip, while another struck him on the back of the head with a slung shot. This fight was the cause of several other rows between the "townies" and the Granger and his friends, and Dave Lurley, deputy sheriff, and Constable Kelly, were kept busy all the afternoon in trying to quell disturbances. The same Granger pitched into a fellow on the dancing platform and knocked him from the center to the edge, ornamenting him with a most beautiful head. But as this was Granger vs. Granger, the "townies" did not intermeddle much.

A lively engagement took place between a couple of men among a lot of grape vines, and the crowd gathered around them so quickly, and pushed this way and that, so that everybody got tangled up in the vines, and a general fight ensued for a few minutes.

An old man named Britton, living near the grove, was knocked down by a man from Sarpy county, whose name we could not learn, and falling on a sharp stump cut his head terribly. He was taken into the bushes and there had his head packed in ice. The man who knocked him down was arrested by one of the marshals of the day, who brought him before a justice of the peace. This officer placed his bail at $1,000 to appear before the District Court. The man then walked off without giving the required bail.

A young man was sitting under a tree talking to a girl, when another fellow came up, club in hand, and asking him "Why the h—l he was talking to his girl," knocked him over and took possession of the lady.

We could go on and give accounts of several similar affairs, but they all were not of much importance as compared to the

between the "townies" and the "granger boys," which had been brewing all afternoon from the first fight, and which terminated at the conclusion of the picnic. An attempt was made to get up a single-handed fight between a "townie" and a "granger," but this only resulted in separating the two elements, about fifty on a side, and suddenly the Grangers rallied, and pushing hither and thither, they raised the war-cry of "go for them!" and suiting the action to the word, they raised their war-clubs, with which they had previously armed themselves, and pitched into the city roosters.

The "townies" being outnumbered gave way, and were driven out of the woods by the "Grangers." The "townies," on the retreat, also grabbed up clubs, rails and boards, and while the running fight continued several boys on both sides were knocked down. The "townies," upon reaching the open bottoms, made a stand, and then the fun began in earnest. The air was alive with clubs, stones and missiles of all kinds, which occasionally keeled a fellow over. Several side fights were also in progress, and the prospect was that somebody would get killed if the battle continued, when one of the Omaha boys pulled out a revolver and fired two shots into the grass. This settled the row, as the "Grangers" didn't want any bullets "in theirs'," and, not knowing how many more might follow, they retreated. They were at home with clubs, but not with revolvers.

The conduct of some of the Omaha boys was disgraceful. There was a mob of about half a dozen, who seemed to make it their especial business to raise disturbances, get into fights, and smash heads with beer glasses. Had the Grangers threshed every one of this particular mob, it would have taught them a deserved lesson. However, as we understand it, the Omaha boys were not wholly to blame for the last grand wind-up.

THE HOME RUN.

The train started on the home run at 7 o'clock, arriving at Omaha at a quarter to eleven, the engine having given out two or three times, and finally the train laid at Gilmore till another engine was sent for from Omaha to take it in.

Everybody was completely tired out, but the general feeling among the excursionists, with the exception of the "Ko-ops," who seemed rather down-hearted over the failure of their pet scheme, was that a splendid time was had, and that the Grangers had most hospitably entertained their guests. In conclusion, we can safely say that the Granger celebration was a success, and those who didn't go missed a good thing.

POLICE COURT.

Flourishing Business of the Fourth.

The Police Court did a lively business on the Fourth. Wm. Taylor, a suspicious stranger, was fined $3 and costs on a venture, and ordered to leave. Mrs. Florence for being intoxicated was sobered off by a fine of $3 and costs.

Patrick Kelley became to exuberant on corn juice, and was quieted by a fine of $2.

Thomas Barrett was fined $5 and costs for carrying concealed weapons.

Peter Moline, for disturbing the peace, was discharged on the payment of costs.

Lizzie Vickery was fined $1 and costs for disturbing of the peace.

Alfred Hartrey, for disturbing the peace was fined $1 and costs.

Yesterday Mary Ann Tate, for disturbing the peace, was discharged on promise of a hasty exodus from our midst.

John Meyers, Pat McKerney and James H. King were arrested for being drunk, but inasmuch as it was a harmless fourth of July tear, they were discharged.

CHEAP FOR CASH.

The maxim of a cash system, is as apparent to the public at large, as to the economist. Therefore, we earnestly advise all to take advantage of the opportunity now offered them, by calling at P. H. Allen's—Creighton's Block, third door south of the Postoffice building—and examine his stock of groceries, which consists of the choicest assortment in the city, making yourself familiar with his prices, thereby convincing yourself that he is capable of affording entire satisfaction to all, and that in patronizing him, you will save money.
