weather growing warmer toward the close of the week tended to weaken prices. Eggs have ruled steady at 20@21c. Butter has been slow the entire week and it is difficult to sell any except the best grades. The greatest depression has been felt in dressed poultry, which has been arriving in liberal quantities. The warm weather has forced commission men to sell for what they could get and at the same time retail dealers have not ventured to buy beyond their immediate wants. With the prospects of large receipts, just preceding Thanksgiving day, the outlook cannot be regarded as bright unless cold weather sets in which will enable commission men to carry over their stock and hold for better prices. Almost the same thing will apply in the case of game, which may be said to depend as much on the weather as upon supply and demand.

Potatoes are still in good demand and the receipts small. Shippers appear to be holding back. Good grades of onions sell readily at good prices. Considerable poor stock, that has been frozen and is soft, is coming in, and does not meet with very ready sale. Limited quantities of the new crop of beans are being received, and find a more ready market than during the earlier portion of the season. The apple market remains slow, the supply being in excess of the demand and sales slow.

Commission men predict a fair business the coming week and strong prices, if the weather is favorable.

OMAHA WHOLESALE MARKETS.

Saturday Evening, Nov. 21.

General Markets.

The day could hardly be more unfavorable for the handling of all perishable kinds of produce. The morning was dull and cloudy, which threatened rain, and the markets were consequently inactive and sales small. Later in the day a fair quantity of produce changed hands, but the demand was not equal to the supply. Prices ranged about the same as on the previous day, and there was little change in the condition of the markets.
