IN THE CLASSIC STYLE.

The Artistic Spirit of Bygone Days Embodied In This Modern Home.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

The frequent agitation of the question of architectural style in this country is a subject which has a fascination for every one who may be more or less familiar with buildings of recent date. The wealth of the country, the energy and originality of the people and the condition of modern life offer a rich field for the growth and development of architecture in every branch, but more especially in domestic work. But the facts are today that in whatever direction we are tending it is the classic style and spirit that are most influential upon modern work. Here we have their effects through many lands and changes, with the advantage of having access to all that has gone before and the privilege of selection and adoption from the best works of the master minds of the past, so that there is no excuse for the display of poor taste or the use of inappropriate design in plans or outlines of a structure.

Here is a home which is pleasing and attractive in appearance from the mere simplicity of outlines and details and expresses the taste and refinement of our grandfathers of colonial days.

The cellar is seven feet in depth, with walls of stone laid in cement. Above the foundation walls the house is of wood, framed and braced in the old fashioned way, with corner posts and girts framed in and braced at the corners. The exterior side walls are sheathed with tongued and grooved lumber and covered with tarred paper and clapboarded with the usual beveled siding. The roofs are shingled with 18 inch cedar shingles. The gables are covered with 6 by 18 inch white pine shingles laid 4½ inches to the weather. The corner boards have neatly molded caps and bases, and all the exterior details are in simple classic spirit.

Inside the rooms show for themselves as to arrangement. The floors are doubled. First a tongued floor of spruce is nailed diagonally across the beams, on top of which is blind nailed the finished floor at right angles to the floor beams. The side walls and ceilings are hard finished in two coats of brown mortar and seasoned lath.

The stairs are of cherry. All other woodwork is of cypress, stained, filled, varnished and rubbed smooth. The house is fully equipped with all modern improvements and is heated by a hot air furnace.

This house can be erected for $3,500.

D. W. KING.

The Stone Cottages of England.

In strong contrast to our country dwellings are the stone cottages of the humblest laborer of the British isles, with their thatched roofs and roses climbing to the very chimney tops. It is to be hoped that the day will come when our rural architecture will be created from the abundant stone that may be had for the carriage in many adjacent localities. This native stone, when put up by a rural stonemason by the perch, is a very cheap structure. It is, moreover, picturesque when green vines tone down its rugged harmony, and especially if the architect shows any taste in its treatment.

A fine specimen of "broken Eshler" in the crude stone may be seen in the gateway of the Davidson place on the Rockville pike, near Washington. It is of cream color quartz stone, which abounds in the Bethesda district. Another specimen of rugged stone work that has withstood the storms of a century and is still young in its old age is the Noirse homestead and the president's country house adjacent on the same road. No paint pots needed for their unfading colors nor harassing fear of the fire fiend. By putting out the interior of a stone house for the plasterer one obtains a cool, dry house for summer and a warm, close shelter in winter.

I have found the best modern type of the stone suburban house near Philadelphia, where they are low and broad, of one or two stories, with an attic. Insist on broad fireplaces in the country, where one may have the real luxury of a log fire. It might be superfluous to suggest that one avoids the dust of the highways and obtains better effects by building well back from the road and of course upon an elevation, either natural or artificial.—Washington Star.

A Dangerous Fad.

The copper vases of Benares and Cashmere are again in great demand by bric-a-brac hunters. It is a dangerous fad for the novice to take up, for a liberal estimate would put the proportion of genuine to counterfeit imported to this country at about 5 per cent.—Builders' Monthly.

Catarrh AND COLD IN THE HEAD

relieved instantly by one application of

Birney's Catarrh Powder

REV. FATHER CLARICE, Sec'y to the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Columbus, Ohio, writes:

GENTLEMEN—I cannot say enough for your Powder. It has proved one of an appreciated class of patents which not only could help me, but delighted with it, all my friends to whom I introduced it, and spoke enthusiastic over it. The good effects from it are marvelous. I will do anything in my power to speak a good word for the remedy to help others who are suffering.

M. N. FRANCISCO, Counsellor U. S. Appraiser's House, Chicago, writes:

GENTLEMEN—Being almost entirely deaf for a number of years and getting no relief from many remedies tried, was induced by a friend to try Dr. Birney's Catarrh Powder for my catarrhal deafness. Have received no permanent benefit, so that I can now hear a watch tick, partially. I have had 14 doctors from my city, some of them specialists, and have consulted the best in other cities in my search for relief, but have never found a remedy I have been benefited by, which is the first I can find to relieve.
