Trustee's Sale.

Whereas, Oliver Perry Hardy and Kate H. Hardy, by their Deed of Trust, dated the 21st day of January, 1887, and recorded in the Recorder's office of Holt County, Missouri, in Book 66, Page 9, conveyed to Henry Shutts, as trustee, the following described real estate, situate, lying and being in the County of Holt and State of Missouri, to-wit:

The North-half of the southwest quarter of section 8, in township 60, of Range 38.

Which said conveyance was made in trust to secure the payment of certain notes in said deed of trust described; and whereas default has been made in the payment of said notes and the interest thereon; now, therefore, I, the undersigned trustee, in pursuance of said provisions of said deed in trust, and at the request of the Legal holder of said notes, aforesaid, will on between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon of said day, at the north door of the Court House in the city of Oregon, in Holt County, Missouri, proceed to sell the above described property at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash for the purpose expressed in said deed of trust.

HENRY SHUTTS, Trustee.

THE SIN OF WATER DRINKING.

The Vast Number of Debilitated Water Consumers in the Land.

That the idea of restraining citizens from destroying themselves with water has fun in it for those gifted with humor cannot be denied, and need not be evaded, but the spirit of levity should not run riot. First, let it be noted that a great deal of water is fearfully impure. The most deadly diseases are propagated in it. It is the American habit, at each meal, to begin with a glass of ice water. There is not a hotel waiter in the country who does not understand this and act upon it, of course. The ice water chills the stomach and dilutes the gastric juice. This prepares not for digestion, but for dyspepsia.

The habit of deluging the stomach with ice water has a tendency to overwork the heart. The first thing at the German springs where heart disease is treated is to forbid the use of water. The reason is that the force pump must not be overworked. When human beings become sacks of water, the heart has extra work thrown upon it and heart failure follows. The German prescription for overworked hearts is a mild cup of tea in the morning and evening and a pint of sour wine during the day. No coffee and no water.

In case of great thirst the mouth may be moistened without swallowing the liquid used, and a little dish of ice cream is permitted in the evening. There is not a bit of a joke about this, and science is behind it. One of the terrors of the times is Bright's disease, and the common story is that it is in its origin alcoholic. But not long ago an esteemed citizen of Cincinnati, who never drank a drop of spirituous or malt liquor fermented wine or cider, died of a well marked case of the Bright's malady. What is the explanation? He was an intemperate water drinker. The kidneys are destroyed by tenents of drink, no matter what, only it is reasonable to hold that hot and cold rebellious liquors hasten the decay. Here we have the three great vital organs the stomach, the heart and the kidneys assailed by the abuse of water.

The victims of the water habit are to be seen on all sides, and counted by thousands and tens of thousands. Intelligent physicians know them on sight, as readily as their fellow citizens bloated with beer or saturated with whiskey. There is a style of rotundity and flabbiness in a make up of which water is the chief ingredient that form a distinct type. Sufferers from this sort of thing should begin the work of reformation at once. Drink nothing before breakfast. Take coffee or milk or tea in moderation, and make the amount very small at the start. One glass of water before the next meal is not absolutely destructive, but should be avoided, and there should be no water drinking at all during meals and very little drinking of any sort.

Before going to bed wet the mouth, but eject the fluid, and if dreams come of sparkling streams, babbling ice cold through green fields or wastes of snow, accept the pleasures of the imagination and be thankful for the luxuries of fancy. Those who care to reduce weight rapidly must refuse sugar, butter and potatoes.

Murat Halstead.

English and American Clothing.

Eugene Field, writing from England, calls attention to a delusion which is widely diffused on this as well as on the other side of the Atlantic. Speaking of men's wearing apparel, he says that "in the manufacture of clothing the United States is far ahead of England." Clothes are made for a lower price there than here, he acknowledges, but he adds that a suit made by a good tailor in any of the leading American cities will outwear three suits made by London workmen. The best qualities of British woolen cloths are better than those woven in the United States, but when these cloths are fashioned into clothing they fail to give satisfaction. British tailors use inferior lining in the clothes they make, they neglect the seemingly unimportant but in fact highly essential details, and when they secure a good fit it is due more to good luck than to skill. Nor is the clothing for the feet any better than that for the body. The leather in English shoes cracks after they are worn a short time, the sewing is carelessly done, and they soon fall to pieces.

This is the testimony of an acute and intelligent person on a subject of practical importance coming under his personal observation. It is in line, too, with all that has been written and spoken on the same general subject for years past. It has been shown dozens of times and in scores of ways that articles of necessity for the average person can be obtained as cheap in the United States as in Great Britain, or cheaper, when quality is considered. Not only can all that is worn on the head, body and feet be had for as low a price here as there, or lower, but everything that is eaten or drank, or which in any way ministers to the general health or comfort, can be bought with us for at least as little money as with the English, and in far greater variety and excellence. Luxuries perhaps cost more here than there, but the person who purchases luxuries can afford to pay the price charged for them, and is not doing any grumbling in the matter, or if he is the masses of the people are not called on to feel any great concern about his troubles in this direction. For nine out of every ten persons, despite the assertions of socialists and Bourbon demagogues to the contrary, the conditions of existence for the average worker are immeasurably brighter and better in the United States than they are in Great Britain or in any other part of the world.—Globe Democrat.

A NUMBER of young ladies, graduated from Vassar, Wellesley, and other similar institions, have recently founded in in New York what is known as "The College Settlement in Rivington Street," for the purpose of teaching the people of that neighborhood "how to live." Frances J. Dyer will describe the humane enterprise in the number of Harper's Bazar to be published May 13th.

Immigration Here and There.

The immigration question is just now exercising the minds of statesmen in two of the leading countries of the world. England, as well as the United States, has a problem of this sort on its hands at this moment. It seems that annually a few thousands or tens of thousands of persons from the continent of Europe who leave home with the intention of coming to the United States, and who design to take shipping from some of the ports in Great Britain, never get beyond the latter country. Whether from lack of sufficient money to enable them to cross the Atlantic, or from general shiftlessness or want of sustained purpose, they get "stranded" in the British Islands, and ultimately drift to the larger cities, there in time to either become a public charge or to help recruit the growing armies of the idle or the vicious. A royal commission, which is usually created in England to investigate any urgent question of broad national concern, has been inquiring into this matter, and it still, we believe, has the subject under consideration.

In the United States the immigration question, in a general way, presents itself under a somewhat similar aspect. The purpose in neither country is to discourage immigration in its general manifestations, but to keep out an undesirable class of immigrants. To us, however, the question is a larger one than it is to the British, and presents itself in a greater variety of phases. The alien arrivals of the objectionable sort in the United States every year outnumber at least three to one those which Great Britain receives in that time. Moreover, many if not most of those of this class who come here come in obedience to the wishes and in conformity with the plans of the authorities of the nations which they leave. They are "assisted" to the United States by the agents of the government of their own country, so as to avoid the expense of their maintenance. There are laws, of course, here to prevent this outrage, and in some instances these laws are inforced. In spite of all our vigilance, though thousands of this class of immigrants every year successfully pass the barriers erected against their entrance, and become incorporated in the mass of the country's population, their presence being ultimately revealed among the tramps and vagrants by which the more thoroughly settled sections are infested or in the records of the insane asylums or penal institutions of our large cities, especially on the Atlantic seaboard.

As Is Well Known.

The New People's Cyclopedia has already had a success and a sale which are phenomenal in cyclopedia annals—over 90,000 sets in six year about 270,000 volumes. This far exceeds the number sold in the same time by any kindred work. The causes of this wonderful and well-deserved popularity are well know, and need not be recapitulated here.

Bearing in mind that The New People's Cyclopedia leads all its competitors in the matter of copies sold, a careful estimate of the combined sales of all other Cyclopedias now on the market convinces us that there are in use today in the tens million homes in the United States considerably less than half a million of Cyclopedias! This is a mere drop in the bucket.

Not one family in fifty owns a cyclopedia, and it is a safe assertion that of those works in use at the present time fully one-half are antiquated and out of date, being from five to twenty years old.

Every home, every family, should possess a popular work of reference such as The People's Cyclopedia a work dealing with every imaginable topic under the sun, the subjects treated being well digested and fitly proportioned, full without useless verbiage, concise but not meager, crisp but not scrappy a work to which father, mother and children may resort as readily as to a familiar friend for aid when perplexed by some knotty question in business, domestic economy, or school studies a work, in short, whose handy volumes lie on the family table or stand on a convenient shelf ready for use by every one in the house, and saying to all, "Inquire Within for Every Thing."

Every One has Noticed These Things

There never was a man so humble or obscure that his biography would not be interesting.

It is only on the first trip that he takes away from home that a man writes "notes by the way."

If the room is too warm and you open the door, every man who comes in will think it his duty to close it.

The same legs that dance for hours without tiring give out in five minutes carrying wood.

The smaller the deposit a man has in a bank, the oftener he walks by to see if the bank's doors still open.

Let to-morrow take care of itself, and you will find that it will let you take care of yourself when it gets here.

Many girls get married because their folks are not able to keep them, and find their husbands in the same fix.—Parson White.

Listening to some people tell a story is equal to judging a view by what you can see through a dusty window.

Some people think they may pay a debt by telling their creditors every other day that they have not forgotten that they owe it.

Imposing on a Queen.

The benevolence of Queen Margherita of Italy is so well known and so spontaneous that not only do the honest poor and suffering among the Roman people frequently appeal to it, but an attempt is now and then made by the undeserving to take advantage of her sympathetic nature.

Not long ago there was at work, not far from Rome, a counterfeiter named Galloni. In the course of his criminal occupation, he counterfeited the notes of the Bank of France, and counterfeited them so completely to his own satisfaction that what seemed to him a happy thought occurred to him.

"I will send one of these to the good hearted qeen," he said to himself, "and tell her that I am a poor citizen, who, having some doubts of the genuineness of the note, have, haved resolved to throw myself on her majesty's generosity, and ask her to send me an Italian bank note in exchange for it."

Galloni sent his spurious note to Queen Margherita, with his appealing message. The queen received and read the letter, was touched by it, and enclosed a good Italian bank note to the man in place of it.

But she chanced to show the spurious note to an officer of the royal household, who asked for the letter, and, armed with it and the bank note, the police made a descent upon Galloni's house and captured both the man and his false plates.

It often happens in this way that one wrong deed, added to another, betrays the doer. Since Galloni was wicked enough to commit the crime of counterfeiting, it was not strange that he was also ready to impose upon the generosity of a kind hearted monarch. But it was his second crime which exposed the first.—Youth's Companion.

A Brilliant Series of Southern Papers to Appear in The Arena.

In the June Arena will appear two papers of great interest to every intelligent citizen of the South. The first is a magnificent tribute to the memory of the late lamented Henry W. Grady, of Atlanta, by his intimate friend and colaborer, Rev. J. W. Lee, who with Mr. Grady was engaged on a great work on the New South. Then the brilliant young orator and [illegible] met his untimely death. Dr. Lee's paper deals with Mr. Grady as editor, orator, and man, and is said to be one of the finest specimens of prose poetry every written by an American. The other paper is from the pen of Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge, M. C., from Lexington, Ky., and treats in a most exhaustive and statesman-like manner of the Race Question and the South. This paper will be followed by one on the same theme by Senator Morgan, of Alabama, who, in turn, will be followed by Senator Wade Hampton, of South Carolina. Thus the readers of The Arena will have the race question thoroughly discussed by three of the ablest and most popular statesmen of the South. Another feature of great interest to all Southern readers will be contributions by Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University, on "The Economic Future of South," treating of immense mineral wealth of the Southern States.

"Percy's Navy-yard," by Charles Ledyard Norton, with four illustrations, showing different stages in the building and launching of a great ship, will be published in a four-page Supplement to the number of Harper's Young People, May 13th. William Hamilton Gibson's illustrated article in the same number will tell of the toad's "bagpipe" and "the pensive witchery" of his song.

In a Bad Way.

T. T. Geer is a hard-working farmer, but he says that to read a democratic editorial on "agricultural depression" would make a well-dressed farmer feel absolutely naked, while to hear a democratic speech on the same subject creates instant hunger in his stomach and a fearful prospect of famine, though his granaries and cellars are bursting with the necessaries of life. No farmer can read a democratic paper to day without an average loss of five pounds of flesh per day, and his nights are made horrid by spectors of want and destitution.

LAST month we visited Washington through the pages of Demorest's Family Magazine, and enjoyed the very interesting views of the exterior of the White House and its surroundings. This month, in the June number of this popular Magazine (which has just arrived), we enter the Executive Mansion, and are treated to a ramble through its corridors, its executive and private apartments. We thus participate in the special favor shown to Demorest's Magazine, as we are introduced to many features not usually seen by the general public. The White House has never before been so fully and beautifully illustrated; and the numerous handsome pictures which are article contains, including portraits of "Baby McKee," Mrs. Harrison, and the four generations now residing in the White House, make it especially interesting to every American father, mother, and child. This number also contains a picture of four of "mother's darlings" "Out for an Airing," which is a superb water-color, equal in design and execution to those selling at a high price at the art stores; "Athletics for Women" is also finely illustrated; and "The Lady Tramp" will no doubt start many of "Our Girls" off on that healthful exercise, for it tells them just what to do and what to wear when doing it. All the other Departments are full to overflowing with entertaining and helpful matter, and the stories are particularly good. A remarkable 20 cents worth, surely. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 16th, New York.

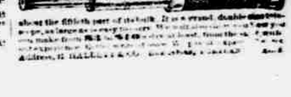
GUN IS GIVEN ON 100 MILES. This EYE, AVE MORE. One of the BEST Telescopes in the world. Our fifteen dollar telescope, and to introduce our superior goods we will send one free to any person who sends us such a bicycle as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and the surround you. The bicycle shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to inches.



Also at the fifth part of the bulk. It is a crystal double magnifying telescope, as large as any sold by others at $5 to $10 each. Now the cost of such a telescope is about $1 to $2 each. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

Proud of the Relationship.

"Oh, Mr. Dusenberry," cried her little brother, "I'm so glad you are going to be kin to me," says the Atlanta Constitution.

"Ah, Johnny, is that so?" he gasped, a look of happiness flitting over his face. "How did you know? Come here and sit on my lap and tell me all you have heard."

"Sister's other fellow come here last night," began the boy, after he was safely in the arms of the young man, devouring a quarter's worth of candy, "and I heard them talking 'bout you."

"What did they say?"

"He was mad," replied the terror "'cause sis goes with you so much."

"And what was her reply to him?" continued the young man, the look of happiness spreading further across his features.

"She said," began the youth, again, "that he needn't get mad 'cause you came to see her, as you was a soft snap and was saving him lots of money that would go to fixin' up their house after they were married."

The look of contentment on the young man's face gave way to the pallor of despair as he gasped:

"Well, how is that going to make me kin to you?"

"Oh," went on the boy, "I'm comin' to that now. She said that when you proposed to her she would be a sister to you; and, won't that make you my brother?"

As the child pickek himself off the floor he beheld the form of the young man flit through the front door.

ONE of the most remarkable narratives of recent African exploration is that of Lieutenant Victor Giraud, just published at Paris, with upward of 100 superb engravings illustrating his journey to the lakes of equatorial Africa. Lafcadio Hearn, the author of the popular English version of France's Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard, has selected and translated for Harper's Weekly a series of excerpts from Giraud's work, which serve to convey an idea of the young Frenchman's journey, and of his singular adventures. The excerpts are to appear together with reproductions of some of the most characteristic illustrations in a four page Supplement to the number to be published May 17th.
