The Merit of the recent Elections.

The nature of the October elections in a Presidential year, is this. It is a contest, a measuring of strength between the concentrated National power of the general government, applied with the intelligence and systematic arrangement of a thoroughly disciplined force upon a certain State election, and the resistance of a mere party. Hence except upon very rare occasions, the result is a decided victory by the administration. Any thing less than such a decision, can but suggest the moral weakness of the administration. Thus is constituted the omnipotence of the elections in two or three States, in determining the result of the succeeding National election. If a mere party is able to meet and achieve even a drawn battle in such a contest with the immense power and resources of the National government, when such great and far reaching interests and matters are involved; the result next month, when no such odds will exist, when this power of the government is weakened to absolute depletion and has to be applied in forty instead of two States, is clearly indicated.

The October elections certainly point to a Democratic victory. The Radicals betray it through ill-concealed admissions, ill-repressed disappointment, idle boasting and stulified assertion. The Democracy appreciate it by enthusiastic and heartfelt rejoicing.

Still nothing is determined. A veritable power, a compact, seasoned and thoroughly disciplined force, such as the National administration, can survive and may recover from any thing less than a crushing defeat. Had a mere party barely carried a doubtful State such as West Virginia, which never before went Democratic in a Presidential year, which was created by the Radical party purely as a Senatorial reinforcement, and been defeated by ever so bare a majority in Indiana, and overwhelmed in Ohio, the Presidential contest would have been decided. But with the administration, a failure is not decisive, and the rest of the campaign will be bitterly waged in a dozen States.

We publish interesting extracts from the leading Journals of the country from which our readers may be informed of the weight attached to the October elections.

THE DEMOCRATIC BARBECUE.

Speeches of Chalmers, Cowan and Shadd.

THE PROCESSION OF THE CLUBS.

The success of the Democratic barbecue on last Saturday was so overwhelming as to surprise even those who had been most sanguine. The Radicals had resorted to every device to keep the colored people from coming. Reports had been circulated amongst them that the barbecue was a democratic trick to bring them together, so that a riot could be raised and the negroes killed. They were told that the meat was poisoned and every trick known to Radical cunning was resorted to, to keep the colored people away. But many had the good sense to see through such falsehood, and the demonstration was such an outpouring of both races, such an enthusiastic, triumphant endorsement of our principles and candidates as to satisfy all that this County was safe for Chalmers and reform.

The speech of General Chalmers was applauded to the echo. He was in his happiest vein, cheered and encouraged by the vast audience gathered to hear him, and with argument, eloquence and humor, he kept the crowd interested and enthused from the beginning of his address to its close.

Judge Warren Cowan, elector for this district, made a highly favorable impression. His remarks were earnest, logical and convincing, and were heard with deep and sincere attention.

After dinner A. W. Shadd, Esq., Chancery Clerk of Washington County, was called for, and made a speech as would have opened the eyes of the blind. Mr. Shadd was a soldier in the Federal army, and spoke knowingly and feelingly of the obligations of the colored people to the Radical party. He said that his people had never received a right or privilege from the Republican party, that was not forced from them by their political necessities. That the colored soldiers during the war were only allowed half pay, and generally put upon the most desperate service, and that the colored people were under no shadow of obligation to the Radicals, but on the contrary, that party had made of them subservient tools for its own aggrandisement. We wish that every colored man in the State could hear Mr. Shadd's truthful portraiture of the Radical party, and his honest exposure of its false and hollow claims to the gratitude of the negro.

THE TORCH-LIGHT PROCESSION.

The most brilliant feature of the occasion was the torch-light procession that closed this glorious day. The procession formed in front of the headquarters of the Greenville Democratic Club, and with stirring music, flashing torches and bright and appropriate transparencies, paraded until a late hour of the night. During the entire day and night good order and good feeling reigned supreme. The white and colored men of the clubs vied with each other in efforts to exhibit the true spirit of political brotherhood. Though triumphant and exultant, all bore themselves as men should who have a high purpose to achieve, and not an indecorous word or act or marred the harmony of the day. In the procession, as co-workers for the great blessings of peace, prosperity and good government, were many of the most substantial and intelligent colored men of the county—men who have always commanded the respect and confidence of their white neighbors, and whose wise counsels, if heeded, would restore and perpetuate good will and mutual respect amongst us all.

The magnificence of this demonstration was a glorious omen of a brilliant victory in November. It was the first actual manifestation of the spirit which last year carried the party of reform triumphantly though all opposition, and shows that our people appreciate the supreme importance of never, even in a national issue, permitting Radicalism to carry Washington County.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The Herald's Washington dispatch says the written application of Gov. Chamberlain for troops to aid him in enforcing the laws, as Chief Magistrate of the State of South Carolina, arrived here to-day, and was placed before the authorities. Troops will be furnished ad libitum.

The Right Spirit.

The Democratic Executive Committee of Ohio held a meeting so soon as the recent election was over, and made every preparation for a vigorous fight over the Presidential election.

Before the Election.

From the Jackson Times.]

Ohio and Indiana vote to-day and by the result of these elections many think that the Presidential contest will be virtually decided. In the event that both go Republican, as we confidently believe they will, the matter may be regarded as settled.

After the Election.

Indeed we are not altogether certain that the Democratic victory in Indiana will not prove of decided advantage to the Republican cause, for the reason that an overwhelming victory in that State might have inspired Republicans with such confidence as to the final result, that they would have become inactive and apathetic.

Contemplating Ohio as Republican and Indiana as Democratic in October it was generally understood that no one could foretell the result in November with any degree of certainty, and that the canvass would probably become the most heated ever known to the history of the country.

South Carolina Politics.

New York Herald.]

If the Republican leaders have not lost their senses, they will make haste to warn Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina. He is playing with fire. He is evidently stirring up trouble in order that he may have an excuse for calling on the Federal government to interfere in the election. Fortunately this is a trick which has been played so often in Louisiana, in Mississippi, in Alabama and elsewhere in the South, that it is now understood in the North, and if the Northern Republican leaders are base enough to play into Chamberlains's hands, to allow him to use them for his purposes, in the hope that his victory will, between now and November, cause a revulsion in public sentiment against them all through the Northern States. This is not Mexico. The war ceased eleven years ago; and all sensible men in the North believe that it is now time to let the Southern States manage their own affairs, and believe this because they see that wherever Federal interference has ceased, peace has come.
