Tall Pine Items. (Correspondence of the Beacon) Baccharis bags, that is, bags being in honor of Bacchus, are not heard as formerly. Well, I suppose that the use of bags as the above mentioned is to promote good fellowship in drinking. It seems to me that they are a prolific source of drunkenness. Lately, I, it is an amatory ode, and it reminds me of Thomas Moore and Robert Burns. I am of the opinion that the contributions of Burns, although not so numerous as those of Moore, are less artificial and show greater genius.

There are two, buggies, wagons and carts to Miller's wear. The rails are good and dry. What a day, which is usually for weak lungs.

A tolerably good supply of fish up to date. I take a survey of my surroundings and I see fish large and small and shad and trout—protein or fish forming substances.

There are eight stores in the village including those of "Hard Core," which is now considered within the lines of the village. Strick a pin here office seekers; and do not forget that the villagers know something of life's symphony?

I am delighted to understand that a few of my acquaintances regard temperance in using spirituous and malt liquors as a physiological necessity, as in the use of sour-apple sauce with pork, and of cranberries with turkey.

Few peaches were eaten the past summer. Apples were plentiful—the most valuable of all fruits. This may appear as a dogmatic expression.

Some sickness, and with doctors Lloyd and Tippet "Eternal vigilance is the price of life" to their patients. They are fully aware that calomel quinine, etc., are not unadmired blessings.

Is it not a little strange that sugar keeps at an average figure—Gents the pound—as plaster of paris is used to adulterate it? I do not mean block sugar. It is not sold that I know of.

I heard from my fellow recently. He writes that he has killed one rattlesnake and shot at several alligators since he has been in the Lone Star State. Oh, my! it seems an age since I saw him.

My nerves are almost exhausted. I suppose I'll have to use a tonic composed of iron, quinine, and strychnine. Maybe it will whip up my failing powers.

What large ears of corn, and farm ers are no pessimists.

The boys at the school near by enjoy themselves after school is out. Now, I am of the opinion that girls should run and enjoy all sorts of innocent vagrancy. They need health as much—nay, more than boys. Health must be earned; it seldom can be bought—of obtaining, for sooth, somewhere an elixir of life which shall impart a perpetual feeling of buoyancy, etc.

Some cycling is indulged in. Miss Nellie A. Harbo in a nephew, of Washington, D. C., are visiting friends of the district.

F. Dominic Hayden Dead. Francis Dominic Hayden died suddenly at his home in the Cedar Point section, Thursday, September 19, 1907, in the 73rd year of his age. Mr. Hayden got up from the dinner table and went out into his corn field, telling the boys to follow him with a wagon. When the young men reached the field they found Mr. Hayden clinging to a stake and unconscious. He was taken home and lived for about three hours but never regained consciousness. Mr. Hayden was one of the best citizens of our county; was a truly Christian man and was esteemed and admired by all who knew him. His remains were buried in St. John's graveyard. May he rest in peace!
