REACHING FOR THE RIVER.

JERSEY CITY'S EFFORT TO EXTEND SOME OF HER STREETS.

How a Corporation Stands Between her and the Shore of the Hudson—What Lawyers Say and What the Anti-Monopolists Say.

The action of the Board of Aldermen of Jersey City, at their last meeting, in reference to monopolies and incorporated companies, has revived an intricate but most important and interesting dispute, which, though often the subject of litigation, seems to have never been satisfactorily settled. The parties to the controversy are the municipal authorities and the Associates of the New Jersey Company, and the question is as to the right of the city to extend York and Grand streets from their present termini, at the buildings of the Associates, to the water front. In the mind of the average resident of Jersey City, the Associates are inseparably connected with the ideas of vast wealth and immense but indefinite powers. They represent one of the oldest and most opulent corporations in the State, and at one time their possessions included what is now the most valuable section of the city. They have parted with much of their land, but they retain their hold on the water front which runs from the ferry at the foot of Exchange place to Communipaw. They have erected wharves and piers, some of which lie in the direct line of York and Grand streets, and interrupt those thoroughfares at some yards' distance from the river. The Aldermen now propose to carry these streets on to tide water. At their recent session they adopted an ordinance which declared that the structures at the foot of the streets mentioned were nuisances, directed their immediate removal, and authorized the extension of the streets to the water. Whether this ordinance can be enforced is a question that is receiving much attention, and about which the best lawyers in the city hold widely different opinions.

It is a matter of great importance to Jersey City. Along the entire line of the shore she owns only a single wharf, which is so located as to be of hardly any benefit.

The title to the property, where the ends of these streets and the wharves and piers of the Associates are situated, can be traced directly to the Colonial Government. Gov. Carteret, by a document known as Patent No. 5 granted and conveyed it to Abraham Isaacson Plank on the 12th of May, 1668. It continued in possession of the latter until the 2d of August in the following year, when John Abeel, the attorney in fact of the owner, conveyed it to Cornelius Van Vorst, from whom it shortly afterward passed to Anthony Dye. Dye assigned it to Abraham Varrick, who, on about April 20, 1804, transferred this tract, containing seventy acres, to Richard Varrick, Anthony Dye, and Jacob Radcliff. In his deed he gave a warranty as to the upland portion of the estate, but not as to the land under water. On the 10th of November, 1804, these grantees were incorporated by an act of the Legislature, under the name of the Associates of the New Jersey Company.

They were empowered specially to build wharves and piers into the Hudson River and the bays thereof opposite their premises as far as they might deem it necessary for the improvement of the property or the benefit of commerce, and "to appropriate the same to their own use." They were also vested with the right to lay out and construct streets until such time as the Legislature should establish a municipal corporation at that place.

At intervals, successive Boards of Aldermen have passed ordinances or resolutions declaring that the property belonged to the city. The venerable ex-Mayor Manners, who is regarded as authority on local traditions, has gone so far as to hold that the city is the real owner of the property. In support of this he says that the city leased one of the wharves to the Cunard Steamship Company. He explains the absence of any lease of that nature on record by saying that it it was stolen for the purpose of clouding the city's title. His view of the question, although, like himself, very popular, does not receive much consideration from lawyers who have investigated the question and are interested in the subject. A reporter of THE SUN called recently on a lawyer who is counsel for many of the alleged monopolies.

"I have not read this last ordinance," he said, "in reference to extending Grand and York streets, but I have heard of it. It is similar to other ordinances that have been passed before and tested in court. Various difficulties have arisen from time to time between the Associates and Jersey City over this very matter. The Municipal Corporation has claimed title to lands under water in front of the Associates' tract of land, in 1850 the city sought, by widening Hudson street, which then ran much nearer the water than it now does, to obtain possession of the wharf property. The Corporation was restrained from interfering with the Associates' premises, and the Court of Appeals confirmed their title, in 1869 the Aldermen, not having profited by experience, returned to the combat, but the courts again decided against them. Since then we have been comparatively undisturbed."

"From whom did the Cunard Company lease their wharf?"

"From the Associates."

"Did the city ever give the Cunard Company a lease of the wharf?"

"No. That is an erroneous impression. The Board of Aldermen did pass a resolution allowing the company to build a fence on the premises, but that was all. The alleged lease from the city is a myth. I think that the title of the Associates is as clearly established as the decisions of courts can establish anything."

The reporter next visited ex-State Senator Leon Abbett, who is the Corporation Counsel for Jersey City.

"I don't think there can be any question," he said, "as to the right of Jersey City to extend her streets to the water front."

"On what do you base that opinion?"

"Well, you know I can't give you my case at this stage of the proceedings. You will find, however, in 7 Vroom the report of a case which sustains that opinion. It was the case of the Hoboken Land and Improvement Company against Hoboken. The action was brought to prevent the extension of streets through the plaintiff's property to the river front. The Court there held, as appears by the syllabus:

"An act of the Legislature incorporating a land and improvement company, and authorizing its filling, occupy, possess, and enjoy all land covered with water, treating and adding the same to the adjacent lands of the corporation, and to construct therein wharves, piers, slips, and other structures for commercial and shipping purposes, will not extinguish the public right of access to the navigable waters by a street on land purchased by the company which by the dedication terminated at the high water line as it was when the dedication was made.

"There is another case in which the Morris Canal was a party, and in which the same question came up, and which goes even further than the Hoboken case."

Mr. Peter Bentley, a wealthy and well-known lawyer, said: "The Associates in 1813 made and filed a map which shows York and Grand streets to run down to the river. They have doubtless sold property with reference to that map, and why, under the Hoboken case, shouldn't that be considered a dedication? There is, however, one important distinction between the Hoboken case and this case. The Associates, in their charter, were expressly empowered to lay out streets and build docks and piers, and hold them for their own use. The clause authorizing them to hold these streets and docks for their own use would seem to have been inserted and intended in order to avoid and defeat any presumption that, in laying out streets, they ever intended to dedicate them to the public."

Much curiosity has been manifested in Jersey City as to the course which the Associates will pursue if an attempt is made to enforce the ordinance. The Anti-Monopolists have announced their determination to bring the dispute to a final and, they expect, a victorious result.

KIDNAPPED IN BOSTON.

Mr. Gerry's Society Discovers Little Abbie Butler's Parents.

Abbie Butler, a brown-haired, blue-eyed child 8 years old, is in the nursery of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, waiting to be taken to her parents in Boston, who say that she was kidnapped from them several months ago. On Tuesday evening she was seen at Pier 28, North River, with Benoit Tourmeaux, a blind Frenchman. She was crying, and appeared to be accompanying Tourmeaux unwillingly. A gentleman called the attention of a policeman to her, and the policeman took him to the Liberty street station, whence a telegram was sent to the office of the society. The Frenchman could not make himself understood, but the little girl told her name. Through an interpreter Tourmeaux finally said that the girl was not his own child, but that she had been given to him by her parents, who lived in Boston. He was discharged, but the child was taken in charge by the society.

To Superintendent Jenkins, Abbie said that her father and mother lived in Clark street, Boston, and that she had been enticed away by Tourmeaux. The Boston branch of the society was communicated with, and looked up the girl's parents. They said that the child had been kidnapped and asked that she be sent back to them. They are poor people, and the father is bedridden, and they say that they do not wish to go to the trouble of prosecuting the Frenchman. Tourmeaux lives at 67 Mulberry street with his wife and fifteen-year-old daughter. His wife is a Belgian gypsy.

Drought in New Jersey.

There is no water running over the Falls at Paterson, and for the first time in many months the reserve pumps of the water company are called into requisition. The dust of the roads and streets hangs over the city like a yellow cloud, the grass around is as dry as an ash heap to the depth of ten inches. Crops are suffering and wells and cisterns are running dry.

RESCUE OF DROWNING PERSONS.

Apparatus Provided by the Board of Health, and Rules for Resuscitation.

The Board of Health, in the year 1869, caused to be placed at various points along the North and East Rivers apparatus for the rescue of drowning persons. The points selected included all the ferries and the principal piers where passenger boats land. A set of the apparatus consists of a ladder, a pole, a grappling hook, a heaving line, and a float. The apparatus is inspected from time to time, and although it is not as perfect as the Board would make it if money were available, it is the only public provision of the kind at the water front. The Police Department was instructed in the use of the apparatus, and copies of the following rules for resuscitating the drowned were posted in conspicuous places:

Remember that the patient must be treated instantly, and on the spot where rescued. He must be freely exposed to the open air; loosen the clothing so as to freely expose the neck and chest. All persons not needed for saving him should avoid crowding about. Let the throat and mouth be cleansed by placing the patient gently face downward, with one of his wrists under his forehead. Quickly wipe and cleanse the mouth, and if the patient does not breathe, immediately begin the following movements:

Place the patient on his back, with shoulders raised, and supported easily on a folded coat or some kind of pillow.

Let one person, at the patient's head, grasp the tongue gently and firmly with his fingers, covered with a bit of handkerchief, and draw it out beyond the lips; then either hold it or press the under jaw chin up so as to retain the tongue outside the mouth; but it is better to hold it in that position with the hand.

Raise the patient's extended arms upward to the sides of his head, and then pull them steadily, firmly, slowly outward. Next turn down the elbows by the patient's sides, and bring the arms closely and firmly across the pit of the stomach, and press them and the sides and front of the chest gently but strongly for a moment, then quickly begin to repeat the first movement. Let these two kinds of movements be made very deliberately and without ceasing until the patient breathes, and let the two movements be repeated about twelve or fifteen times in a minute, but not more rapidly, remembering that thoroughly to fill the lungs with air is the object of the first or upward and outward movement, and to expel as much air as possible is the object of the second or downward motion and pressure. This artificial respiration should be steadily kept up for forty minutes or more when the patient appears not to breathe; and after the natural breathing begins, let the same motion be very gently continued, and let the proper stimulants be given in the intervals.

If help and blankets are at hand have the body stripped and wrapped in blankets, but do not allow the movements to be stopped. Bystanders can supply dry clothing. The assistants should briskly rub the feet and legs, pressing them firmly and rubbing upward, while the movements of the arms and chest are going on. Apply hartshorn or a feather within the nostrils occasionally, and sprinkle or lightly dash cold water upon the face and neck. The legs and feet may be rubbed and wrapped in hot blankets if blue or cold, or if the weather is cold.

When the patient begins to breathe give brandy by the teaspoonful, or hot sling two or three times a minute, until the beating of the pulse can be felt at the wrist, but be careful and not give more of the stimulant than is necessary. Warmth should be kept up in the feet and legs, and, as soon as the patient breathes naturally, let him be carefully removed to a house, and be placed in bed under medical care.

A DISCARDED SUITOR'S REMEDY.

James Pearse Sets Forth in Writing his Reasons for Shooting Himself.

About midnight Saturday, James Pearse, an employee of H. B. Claflin & Co., shot himself in the abdomen with a small pistol in front of 16 Vesey street. An ambulance carried him to the Chambers Street Hospital, where Dr. Murray said the wound was probably mortal. Pearse's condition did not improve yesterday. He was very communicative. He said he was 25 years old and a native of Ireland. He had been in this city ten months. To Dr. Murray he presented the seven-chambered pistol with which he had shot himself. To the Church street police he turned over three letters which he had written and enclosed in stamped and addressed but unsealed envelopes. One was addressed to his father, James Pearse of Longford, Ireland, another to Miss Clara Wilder, 527 Greene avenue, Brooklyn, and the third to Pearse's sister, Mrs. J. C. O'Neil, Chatham, Ont. In the letter to his father he says life has become a burden to him because of his sweetheart's unfaithfulness, and the opposition of her family to his suit. He also expresses the hope that his brother George will make better use of his father's wealth than he has of the £3,625 already spent on him, and desires debts to be paid to Prof. Griffin of 1,957 Third avenue, Mrs. Morrell of Corona, L. I., and others. The letter to his sister, Mrs. O'Neil, runs as follows:

MY DEAR FRANK: I have committed suicide. You will find one letter addressed to 527 Greene avenue, Brooklyn. Unfortunately, your loving brother, JAMES PEARSE.

The letter addressed to Miss Wilder is as follows:

JULY 24.

MY DEAR CLARA: I proved your unfaithfulness to me on Thursday evening. I never expected you would be so. You promised me times without number that you would marry me even if it came to me on Wednesday. May I ask why? Is it for your father's sake, to go to Brooklyn and marry you, never giving me notice, and making your father and all your relatives believe that I wished to elope with you. Oh, Clara, I never thought you would have acted so with me, as in all my correspondence with you and in our several conversations I always acted the part of a gentleman. I even would not go to the Parkville gossipers, who were always running down your family. Because I went on Thursday to have a look at you, I was amazing to see you—very natural that I should—expecting that you would have continued true to me, your brother-in-law came after me as if I were a burglar, and said I should leave the locality, calling me a "dirty scoundrel," adding that he would think very little of putting a bullet through me. It not being my wish to have any quarrel with your relatives, I left. Now, Clara, I leave forever, so that you will never be annoyed by me again, and then you can go to Parkville, as I am blamed for your being away from home, which is not right. My parting wish is that you will enjoy your prospects, and get some one for a husband more worthy of you than a "dirty sloughd." Remember my autograph, and I ask you, my dear Clara, for whose sake I do this rash act, to remember me.

Your once true and faithful friend, now your unfortunate friend, JAMES PEARSE.

P. S.—I never wanted your father's money, and you know it.

The father of Miss Wilder is connected with the firm of E. Butterick & Sons, 555 Broadway. She lives at Parkville. The bullet fired by young Pearse is of twenty-two calibre, and pierced the abdominal cavity about four inches to the left of the median line.

Sarah Valleau.

Sarah Valleau, spinster, 88 years old, was buried in the Presbyterian Cemetery at Madison, N. J., on the 12th inst. She was born in this city of parents who were of French descent, and whose remains lie in St. Paul's churchyard. Fifty-eight years ago, when she was 30 years old, she entered the family of the late John A. Brower as a domestic, immediately after that gentleman's marriage, and for forty-eight years served the family. She had been feeble for the past ten years, and had been cared for at Mr. Brower's house. About ten weeks ago, during the illness of Mr. Brower, she was sent to the Old Ladies' Home, in charge of Mrs. Van Pelt, at Madison, where she died. It is said that on the 10th of June, the day on which Mr. Brower died, she begged to be taken back to New York, and said she knew he was dying. The funeral was attended by Mrs. A. B. Brower and two other sisters of the late Mr. Brower. The old lady's pleasures are entered by every member of the family, and by many visitors who miss her familiar face at the Brower mansion.

Mrs. Schroeder's Stolen Jewels.

LONG BRANCH, July 24.—Mrs. C. Schroeder, who was a guest at the Irving House at the time of Tuesday's fire, which destroyed the hotel, has made an affidavit that during the excitement attending the fire her trunks, which were never were broken open and robbed of jewelry amounting to $2,000 in value. The police have sent a minute description of the missing articles to Superintendent Walling in New York. Mrs. Schroeder recently arrived from Paris, her home.
