HARVARD BUILT CHAMPION TEAM OUT OF RAW MEN

Desperate Play Rubbed Into Crimson Candidates by Coach Haughton, Using New Method.

(Special to The Evening World.)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 21.—No Harvard team in years has gone to face Yale with brighter prospects of winning and more confidence in its backers, and no team for years has had such a gloomy outlook at the beginning of the football season. Last year the team had a splendid personnel of players, who would have been almost invincible if they had had the proper coaching.

With only two old players to form a team with Coach Haughton was much handicapped when he began his work. There was more or less material on the field, but it had not been tried out, and he knew absolutely nothing about its value. Most of it was what might be well called scrub material rather than first-class 'varsity stock. But Coach Haughton set to his task in a most businesslike way—a method that has not been much in evidence on Soldiers' Field in the past—and tried out all the men either in person or through the reliable coaches that he selected as his assistants.

Shifted Burr to Guard.

Putting Capt. Burr at right guard and retaining Fish at his position of right tackle, because they had proved their title to those places, Coach Haughton proceeded to fill in the line and the back field.

Coach Haughton simply had to literally manufacture a man for the generalship of the team and teach him all the technicalities of the place. It would have been best to pick some man from the sophomore or junior classes for the place so he could be used another year, but no such man was available. So Coach Haughton, after trying out for a time Gil Browne, the last year substitute end, and giving Galatti a show at the place, took Johnny Cutler, a Boston boy, a senior, who was new to 'varsity football, and spent all his time in developing him. At first Cutler showed remarkable promise in his new place, and seemed to run the team like a veteran, and then he took a great slump, but he finally came back to his early style of play and has since been improving steadily.

Showed Snap and Dash.

In the Indian game and the Dartmouth game he exhibited extraordinary judgment and skill for a green quarterback and ran the team with the smoothness, snap and dash of an old-timer. His recent work has been of such a character that he has won the confidence of all, and those who have watched him from day to day say they think that he is the sort of man to lead a team to victory.

Though the individuals of this year's eleven are not, with the exception of Capt. Burr and Fish, who played last year, quite up to the standard of the individual players of last year's team, they are nevertheless good football stock and have taken naturally to Coach Haughton's training.

Browne a Strong End.

Gil Browne, the left end, played end his freshman team and showed up so well that he was first substitute end last year, and to show what confidence there was in him last year he took Dill Starrs's place during the last of the Yale game when Starr was removed. Browne is a good end, he is long and rangy and plays hard on the offense and defense in the line, but he is slow in getting down the field under punts.

Robert McKay is an Andover star and did such good work on his freshman team last year that great things were expected of him on the 'varsity. He has an ideal build for a tackle, and should, with the proper amount of aggressiveness, be a star of the first magnitude in the football sky, but all season he has disappointed his admirers by his lack of the initiative and the rather indifferent manner in which he played his game. Undoubtedly he would have lost his place at left tackle if he had not taken a spurt. In the last two games he came up, to the surprise of all, and played as an old veteran. In a very quiet way, but most effectively, he was into all the plays, broke the line, tumbled his men over on the offense or recovered the ball. If he had some of Fish's vim and spirit McKay would be a remarkable tackle.

Nourse forms the centre of a quintet that is the pride of the Harvard team. He gave Grant a hard run for that place last year, and this year has shown himself to be one of the best centres on the college gridiron. He is exceedingly accurate in passing the ball, and has not made a fluke pass all season. On both offense and defense he is a power that few can move, and his faculty in following the ball is exceptional. His recovery of the ball and sensational run saved the Crimson a defeat from the Navy. In the Williams game he recovered the ball in scrimmage and made a fifty-yard run for a touchdown, which was, however, called back, as he ran outside in getting away.

Hoar a Line Breaker.

Hoar, the right guard, was substitute last year, and played for Capt. Parker in the Yale game. He is of the long, rangy type that characterizes the Harvard line, with sufficient weight to hold his own with the best of them.

Capt. Burr, the giant left guard, is the pivot around which the Harvard team has been built up this season. It would be difficult to find a better all around man on the American gridiron than he. He made the 'varsity in his freshman year and played two years at left guard. Last year he was put at left tackle by the coaches, but this season he was given his old position, a place which he seems to be best fitted for. Aside from his excellent playing in the line, which it would be hard to duplicate, Burr is the best punter, so experts say, in the field to-day, and there is fit that has been missed most since he has been unable to play owing to the injury which he received just before the Brown game from falling on the ball.

Fish a Great Player.

Fish, the left tackle who played last year, has proved himself to be the most effective man on the team next to Capt. Burr. Last year he was ungainly and awkward in his play, and did not seem to get into the game to any extent, but this season he is another man. He has great strength and aided by his height, plays a powerful game on defense, as do breaking holes in the opponents' line. Fish has probably been more disastrous to visitors than any other man on the Harvard line. Much of the ground that has been gained for scores has been the result of his clever recovery of the forward pass. Here his strength and height give him a great advantage over the opposing end. Time and again he has gone through the line and runs down the field catching the ball which is out of reach of the others before they can get him down. He is a hard man to throw.

Crowley, the right end, a Cambridge lad, made his reputation on his freshman team last fall playing that position. Like Brown, the other end man, Crowley while good in the line and a good tackler yet is too slow in getting down the field.

At quarterback, as has been said, Johnny Cutler is literally a manufactured player made for the emergency of the year in the absence of other and better material.

Corbet Is a Wonder.

Corbet, the breezy youth from the far West, at left halfback, has proved himself to be a superb ground-gainer. At left end on the freshman team last year he played a splendid game. This year, as there was a surplus of end material, the coaches put him in the back field for a trial and once there they found that they could not afford to remove him. He is not a heavy man for the place, but he makes his ground by speedily dodging through the unguarded holes that a larger man could not make. Being light he seems to tire about the middle of the second half, but up to that time when he is in form he is a terror to the opposing line. Time after time he has gained six to ten yards at one plunge. In the Indian game he broke through for the first touchdown.

White, Corbet's running mate in the backfield, has been first string substitute on the Varsity for two years, but this season is the first time that he has sprung into prominence. He is heavier than Corbet, with equal speed, and of the two is the more consistent ground gainer, partly due to his great power of endurance.

The fullback position has been a problem for the coaches. Kennard has been substitute back for two years and has held his place on account of his punting ability. After casting about and trying several men, Coach Haughton took Ver Wiebe, the substitute tackle, and tried him out. Ver Wiebe proved to be just the man for the place. He is heavy and very speedy, with great endurance. In a remarkably short time he mastered the technicality of his new position and made himself a line smasher of first quality. His speed and fearless line plunging add a great deal of strength to the backfield, and the aid that he gives Corbet and White is such that they are greatly improved as ground gainers. He is of the Jack Wendell type of player, and likewise puts considerable spirit into the backfield.

BIG FIGURES IN TO-DAY'S BATTLE

1908 SEASON MARKS PASSING OF THE "BIG FIVE" IN FOOTBALL

Open Style of Play, Discounting Brute Strength, Has Made Smaller Teams Formidable.

Hereafter Minors Must Be Given Consideration in the Schedule-Making.

LOOKING over the results of the football game the future historians will all hark back to the season of 1908 as the one marking a new epoch in gridiron events, for the season has been one of such general surprises that the smaller colleges outside the heretofore "Big Five" must become a factor in the future. This barrier removed, the minors will claim consideration in future schedule-making and have their share of honors in casting up the records for the year.

Innumerable instances can be cited which show conclusively that the small colleges have gained recognition purely by individual merit and not by any fluke, as may have been the case in the past. Take, for instance, the victory of Dartmouth over Princeton, Brown and Yale, Carlisle and Pennsylvania and the West Point and Washington and Jefferson. On the other hand, Princeton gave Yale a hard game; Pennsylvania beat Brown, and Harvard beat the Indians, while the University of Pittsburg outplayed the Red Men and Washington and Jefferson lost to the University of Pittsburg.

It's a curious lot of dope, but it all proves conclusively that the development of the football game the future historians will all hark back to the season of 1908 as the one marking a new epoch in gridiron events, for the season has been one of such general surprises that the smaller colleges outside the heretofore "Big Five" must become a factor in the future. This barrier removed, the minors will claim consideration in future schedule-making and have their share of honors in casting up the records for the year.

Take, for instance, the victory of Dartmouth over Princeton, Brown and Yale, Carlisle and Pennsylvania and the West Point and Washington and Jefferson. On the other hand, Princeton gave Yale a hard game; Pennsylvania beat Brown, and Harvard beat the Indians, while the University of Pittsburg outplayed the Red Men and Washington and Jefferson lost to the University of Pittsburg.

It's a curious lot of dope, but it all proves conclusively that the development of the forward pass as seemingly, too, taken the lead.

The lesson is one that has not been lost for the future, and it seems certain that the progress made will be continued, resulting not only in the improvement of the open game has almost obliterated the mass play and the old style game, wherein the brute strength predominated. It's the new era in gridiron development. Further, to this, the change has largely been made through the policy adopted by small colleges of securing their coaches from among those familiar with the style of play among the "Big Five," and these men have made such good use of the lighter material placed at their disposal that the big, overgrown man now has no advantage over his smaller rival when selections are made for the 'varsity teams.

By the open game with the new formations wherein speed and science outdo brute strength, the short kicks, forward pass and numerous trick plays development of the game generally, but more interesting for the spectators, as witness the increased attendance this season to such an extent that in several instances the vast stands have not been of sufficient capacity to care for the spectators. And in probably the only athletic or sporting feature in America sufficient room has been returned to those who desired tickets because there was not room to accommodate the crowds demanding admission to the games.

BRONSON DEFEATS GOODMAN IN FAST BOUT

(Special to The Evening World.)

DAYTON, O., Nov. 21.—Ray Bronson, of Indianapolis, won over "Kid" Goodman, of Boston, in a twenty-round bout last night. In the third round Bronson claimed Goodman fouled him, and in a rage he picked up a stool, which he aimed at the Bostonian. One of Goodman's seconds grabbed the chair from Bronson's hand. Goodman had followed up his man, but Referee Ruehm held him from jumping into the Hoosier.

From the third to the seventeenth round the Boston scrapper was outclassed. He took a brace in the eighteenth, but could not do enough to overbalance Bronson's big margin.

Bowlers in Big Match.

Benz and Norman, of the Nonpareils, Brooklyn, will roll a match of best three out of five games with Dr. Loudon and Benny Whitacre at Wyman's Columbia Alleys, Columbus avenue and One Hundred and Fourth street, Sunday afternoon. There is a side bet of $50.

Can YOU Solve the Puzzle?

Yes, it's a puzzle. Solve it if you can. And when you've solved it, solve the mystery of the Black Bag, too. It's worth while. See Monday's Evening World. Be on the lookout.

TRINITY A. C. HOPES TO BEAT ALL-PHILADELPHIA.

Several hundred members and "rooters" of the Trinity Athletic Club crowded into the clubhouse in Brooklyn last night, at a stag for the benefit of the club's football team, which is scheduled to play the All-Philadelphia team of present and former college stars at Washington Park, Brooklyn, in the morning of Thanksgiving Day.

Captain Kelley, the former Brooklyn High School star, was in his regular place at left halfback, and had for a running mate, at right half, McNally, another Brooklyn school star, who, with Riddick at quarter and Specht at fullback, will form the backfield for the game in the Brooklyn baseball park.

Kelley has greatly strengthened the rush line for this game. Tom Thorpe, former Columbia captain, being at left tackle; Farrier, of Dartmouth, at centre; Costello, of Cornell, the other tackle, and Reilly, New York University, and Von Salzer, Columbia, guards.

Word comes from Philadelphia that Pauxtis, the crack Penn end, who is ineligible for the 'varsity because he has signed to play baseball with the New York Americans next year, will captain the All-Philadelphia team.

THANKSGIVING DAY FOOTBALL GAMES.

The Poly Prep. boys are developing all the trick plays they can conceive, as the strength of Erasmus's line, which they are to back next Thursday, will probably make line-backing futile. It is also the desire of the Poly Prep. management to have as many players as possible in the all-scholastic team and the game with Erasmus will probably decide the chances of many boys. At present there are five or six members of the team who ought to have a look in. Butler, Brooks, Bartly, Roessler, Carlin and Dessler have all done excellent work this season, and the showing these youngsters make against their rivals for the various positions, Gatham, Desterberg and Franklin of Erasmus, will determine who is to get the honor of a place on the all-scholastic team.

Much dissatisfaction has been expressed by students and alumni of Commerce and Clinton over the fact that the Thanksgiving Day game will be played in the morning. A much larger crowd would undoubtedly attend an afternoon game than a morning contest, and as this game is the best money-getter of any of their school, the boys are a little sore because they could not secure the use of the Polo Grounds for the affair.

Their remaining but one more game on the schedule, which is on Thanksgiving Day, when the Red and Blue team will hark up against the Neptune High School team at Asbury Park, N. J. This will be the first meeting of the New York team with the Jerseyites, and little is known of the football ability of the latter.

QUARTER MILLION OF TROTTERS AT ARDMAER FARM.

Stars of the Harness Racing World Luxuriously Quartered at Bradley's Raritan Estate in New Jersey.

BY VINCENT TREANOR.

DOWN in Raritan, N. J., on the banks of the Raritan River, adjoining the extensive estate of J. B. Duke, the Tobacco King, is located one of the finest stock farms in America. It shelters in almost palatial style more than a quarter million dollars' worth of horseflesh, representing the kings and queens of the trotting world.

Major Delmar, one of the trotting wonders of the age, with a mark of 1.55, spends his days here when through with his exhibitions on the grand circuit. Lou Dillon is cared for in queenly fashion in the same barn, along with George G., 2.05. The $10,000 Guy Axworthy, regarded by horsemen as one of the most beautifully formed horses ever foaled, and Bingen, the $55,000 stallion, father of that great speed-getting sire Todd, run noses through the bars of their adjoining box-stalls.

Todd, by the way, is dead. Pneumonia ended his great career very suddenly last May, but among his get are more than a few who expect to perpetuate his fame. An idea of Todd's value may be had from the fact that he was insured for $30,000 by Lloyds, and the insurance was promptly paid after the young sire's death.

Famous Other Stars.

Others of the trotting family under the various roofs of the numerous large and small barns are Red McKinney, a two-year-old stallion, full brother to Sweet Marie; Oxford King, a hackney stud of fine action, and some of the finest brood mares in the country. Among the latter are Lottie Dillon, half-sister to Lou Dillon, in foal to Todd; Palerma, a four-year-old daughter of the famous Nancy Hanks, in foal to Guy Axworthy; Kate and Rose Barron, who hold the pole record, both in foal to Todd; Annetta McKinney, half-sister to Sweet Marie; Lady Axtelle, who has a colt by Guy Axworthy, and who has been bred to Bingen; Emnett Offut, in foal to Guy Axworthy; Devil Girl, by Daredevil, who has been bred to Todd; Sapphire Worthy; Athine, bred to Guy Axworthy; Phoebe Chinders, 2.03½, in foal to Todd, and Anna Little, in foal to Guy Axworthy.

Farm's Odd Name—Ardmaer.

The home of the great collection is Ardmaer, an odd name, by the way, derived from the Gaelic and meaning more than first, or supreme. William Bradley, the New York millionaire contractor, owns Ardmaer. Its purchase more than a year ago by Mr. Bradley was made more in his pursuit of a pet hobby, that of harness horse racing, than for any other reason but since then it has developed into a business enterprise of no small proportions. Thus, the prosperous contractor can combine pleasure with business at a profit.

Ardmaer is most extensive, covering all of 750 acres of the finest oat, hay-raising and pasture land that the State of New Jersey affords. The Raritan Canal runs directly through it.

600-Foot Barn, a Wonder.

Barns of various sizes and dimensions are scattered throughout the farm, but there is one that stands out as a wonder in its way. It is 600 feet long, 77 feet wide, and three stories high. On the ground floor there are 106 box stalls, each 12x12 feet. Everything about its construction is up to date. It is thoroughly ventilated in summer, electric lighted and steamheated in winter. A 600 foot driveway twenty-five feet wide in the rear of the stalls, entirely enclosed, serves as an exercising ground during the cold weather. A massive clock adorns the roof of this great structure, and its tolling of the hours can be heard for miles around.

Mr. Bradley is making extensive improvements in the plant. When completed he expects to have 3,000 feet of barn space on one straight line facing a nicely graded lawn of the same length and unlimited width, separated by a specially made road for outdoor exercising of his great string. Sixty-seven trees, twenty feet apart, will line the edge of the lawn.

A Mile Track, Too.

In the back of the spacious barns a mile track is to be laid out and over this the promising get of Bingen, Todd and Guy Axworthy will go their early tryouts and training.

By next spring Ardmaer with all its up-to-date appointments should be a most picturesque spot. Mr. Bradley and his family have transformed an old country mansion into a luxuriously furnished summer home.

New World's Champion Gets Title From De Oro

HAVING held the world's continuous pool championship for nearly twenty years and believed to be practically unbeatable, it comes as a great surprise to the pool experts that Alfred De Oro has been soundly beaten at St. Louis by young Thomas Hueston, a resident of that city. The final score in the 600-point game, lasting three nights, was 600 to 436 for De Oro.

In his career as a pool player De Oro has competed in nearly 100 games in which the title was at stake, and in them all, except in a very few tournaments, he has lost only twice. Hueston was a former champion, who played in this city two years ago and excited considerable interest by his clever work with the cue. There are several challengers for the title, and the present holder may elect to play in New York soon, as he is very popular here, where the game has a big following.

Charles Morin, of Chicago, recently made a new record at three-cushion billiards by running out a string of fifty points in thirty-seven innings, breaking the previous best record of James Shea, of Chicago, who ran out a string of fifty points in forty-nine innings.

Calvin Demarest, winner of the National amateur billiard championship in 1907, and 1908, has turned professional and joined the Academy bunch of stars at St. Louis. Demarest will enter the big professional tournament to be held in New York soon, and his meeting with Willie Hoppe, who is about his age, will be an interesting event in billiard circles.

Willie Hoppe seems to have caught the public fancy by his stage exhibition of balkline and fancy shots in a Brooklyn theatre, and is likely to go on the circuit.

That Jake Schaefer is again getting back into his old championship form is indicated by a wire to a friend in this city asking when the big tournament will be held, as he wants to begin regular practice.

COLLEGIANS ENTER FOR INDOOR TITLES

For the first time in the history of the indoor championships of the Amateur Athletic Union the colleges of America are taking interest in this meeting. The trainers of the big colleges have decided to take advantage of this opportunity to have their cracks measure strides with the Olympic champions, and the following teams have been entered from Yale, Harvard and Princeton Universities. It is also expected that the University of Pennsylvania will send down a team.

Harvard University Athletic Association entries are: C. C. Little, in the standing broad jump and putting eight-pound shot; S. C. Lawrence, in the three standing jump and standing high jump, and T. L. Barr, in pole vault for height.

Princeton University entries are: M. Dwight, in the 220-yard hurdle and 300-yard hurdle; W. L. Dawbarn, in the 60-yard run and 75-yard run, and C. Vezin, in pole vault for height.

Yale entries are: Two-mile run, R. Spitzer, A. Haskell, M. C. Lightner and J. Weeks, and in the 100-yard run, M. Villas.

CORNELL TURNED DOWN BY COLLEGE HOCKEY LEAGUE

Cornell has been turned down by the Intercollegiate Hockey League, and will not gain admission to that body. It was only after a long wrangle that the Cornell application was refused, the delegates to the meeting saying the membership is large enough as it is now.

T. B. Souther was elected President and B. S. Prentice, secretary. The delegates were J. Prentice Willets and R. Haydock, of Harvard; John Heron, of Yale; William H. Meyer and Charles S. Cox, of Princeton; Preston Locke and G. C. Shaper, of Columbia; S. F. King and Clarence G. McDavitt, of Dartmouth. The schedule will be made public some time to-day.

SOPHOMORES WIN MEET AT DEWITT CLINTON HIGH.

In the dual meet between the freshmen and sophomores of DeWitt Clinton High School, the sophomores won by a score of 49 to 32. The freshmen were outclassed in the distance events, but made a good showing in the sprints. Guilbert, of the sophomores, was the star performer, with a total of thirteen points to his credit.
