Farmers' Agricultural Clubs.

A favorite topic with us has been the encouragement of Farmers' Clubs, in all neighborhoods where the compactness of the rural population would admit of such an organization. With many the idea is not not new—it has been successfully practised for years; but with many others, no such agency has been brot to bear upon their industrial or social advancement.

Let us bring this matter home now to every farmer's earnest consideration. The comparative leisure of Winter is just before us, and amid all the sundry and manifold duties of this life, how can you spend, say one evening in the week, to better advantage than in a social and friendly meeting with your neighbors, to compare notes, and discuss the particular interests of your local agriculture!

The organization is very simple. Let some active man—yourself, for instance—call on a few neighbors, and as many more as convenient—the more the better; fix upon some evening for a meeting at the school house, or some other good place and when met adopt a set of rules, short and simple; have a President and Clerk, who may also be Treasurer and Librarian, if necessary. Agree upon the topic of discussion—wheat, corn, cattle, hogs, fruit, or whatever else you please—and let every one think of it, and be prepared to say something of his own experience, or ask questions of those who are supposed to be well posted. You will be surprised to find how much interest can be awakened by this course, and how men's opinions will be modified, who thought they knew all about it before. Let there be a perfect toleration of every man's notions, subject only to the crucible of reason and experience. No such meeting could pass without making all parties wiser; and besides the actual amount of information to be gained, the social benefit in cementing the individuals of the neighborhood, would alone more than compensate for all the time and expense;—the time indeed would be well employed, and the expense need not be more than to keep the room in order.

Another principal advantage of the Farmers' Club, is that they may possess a Library. Many individual farmers do not feel able to purchase such a variety of agricultural books as they desire. The club can do this in its collective capacity, and each member can have the benefit of the whole. In order to do this, a membership fee of one or two dollars will furnish the capital to begin with, and the Library will always be a central point of attraction.

To forward these liberal objects we will cheerfully and gratuitously afford any assistance or advice in the selection of books, or in other matters relating to the useful establishment of Farmers' Clubs.—Ohio Cultivator.

Removating Old Orchards.

If, as we fear is the case, your orchard has not been manured for some years, prepare and give it a dressing of compost made as follows,

Mix together, layer and layer about, for each acre.

Six loads of woods mould, marsh or river mud.
2 loads of rotten manure.
2 bushels of bone dust.
5 bushels of ashes.
1 bushel of plaster, and
2 bushels of salt.

The whole to be thoroughly mixed together, thrown into a bulk, and permitted to remain so for three weeks; then shovel it over and apply it broadcast over the land, plow it in about three inches deep, so as not to injure the roots of the trees, then harrow and roll.

This done, dress the trunks of the trees, and the limbs as far as you can reach with a white wash brush, with a mixture made in the proportion of:

One gallon of soft soap.
Quarter pound flour of sulphur.
One quart of salt.
Stir the mixture as applied.

If the bark on your trees is rough, mossy or dead like, scrape it off before you apply the mixture. The consequence of this treatment to your orchard will be renewed vigor to your trees, increased proficacy, and fairer fruit.

This Year's Crop.

The reports of our Rail Road Companies show a gratifying increase in their earnings and this too when but little local produce is coming forward, over five hundred thousand bushels of wheat have this season come into Cincinnati from Kentucky and been transported over Ohio roads. Four, too, from Tennessee has been of daily receipt at our depots, but that State keeps back her products despite the high prices. The destruction by the fly last year has developed the bump of caution with our farmers, and hereafter they mean to keep a two year's supply of wheat for family use on hand. Then, again, much less wheat, in proportion to the rye corn, &c., was sown, and the usual yield of corn is not fit for its journey to market until next year. All these causes fortunately keep back Ohio products, for if this State should open her granaries, the roads, in addition to products from the south and west would not have capacity to receive and transport them. The coming winter and spring produce business will be immense, and as, by the terms of the Pennsylvania law, under which the Governor of the State appoints an agent to manage the rail road from Erie to Northeast, that road is to be run as it is, there is no danger of an Erie war, or of detention to freight. So far as the public is concerned, the present position of affairs at Erie secures a peaceful winter.—Cin. Commercial.

SABBETH READING.

How Conversions are Effected in Ireland.

There was a very prejudiced Roman Catholic, who, upon going into a town where placards were posted, was met by the priest, who said to him, "Take care and don't look at those placards; there is heresy in them all." "Oh," said the man, "they are posted on both sides of the road." "Then look you straight on as you pass."—Well, by and by he came to the corner of two of the streets, and there he saw on one of the placards, "The religion of the Roman Catholics is not to be found in the Douay Bible." Sir, this man instantly bought a Douay Bible. Was in great trouble for some time, and at last he communicated his feelings to his wife. He plainly told her of the change which had taken place in his sentiments, and declared that he was a Protestant. With tears in her eyes she exclaimed, 'Bless God for what you have said; I have been a Protestant for two years." She then related her case. They had been stopping in a Protestant lodging house, when, in a china closet which separated their room from another, she heard prayer and the Scriptures read Being struck with what she heard, she went in secret at the same hour every day and prayed, and became so impressed as to procure a Bible. "And," said she, "God has shown me the way of justification by faith in Christ Jesus." Then what was to be done with the daughter of these people! The parents wrote to her, informing her of their spiritual change, and what was the surprise and pleasure to find a letter in return saying that she had been a Protestant for seven months.—And how do you think that had occurred!—After her marriage she went to reside in a certain town, and the priests there invited her and some of her friends to spend the evening with them. This young woman went, and while on the visit took up a book—Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. On the priest approaching she said, "I beg your pardon for having taken up a book that perhaps is not allowed to be read by us."

"O," said the priest, "you and I, who are educated, may read anything; it is only these poor devils (pointing to the gentlemen who set at the other end of the room) who may not read such books."—She pondered over the expression, "You and I who are educated, may read anything."—Then I should like to read the Bible." She at once procured one, and read, and was converted. Thus father, mother and daughter were brought into the family of God.—Paddy's Cabin.

Character of Celebrated Infidels.

But to speak more directly of the morals of leading infidels. Bolingbroke was a liberline of intemperate habits and unrestrained lust. Temple was a corrupter of all who came near him—given up to ease and pleasure. Emerson, an eminent mathematician, was "rude, vulgar, and frequently immoral." "Intoxication and profane language were familiar to him. Towards the close of life being afflicted with the stone, he would crawl about the floor on his hands and knees, sometimes praying and sometimes swearing." The morals of the Earl of Rochester are well known—Goodwin was a lewd man by his own profession, as well as the unblushing advocate of lewdness. Shaftesbury and Collins, while endeavoring to destroy the Gospel, partook of the Lord's Supper, thus professing the Christian faith, for admission to office—a gross blasphemy. Blount solicited his sister-in-law to marry him, but being refused shot himself. Tindal was originally a Protestant—then turned Papist—then Protestant again, merely to suit the times—and was, at the same time infamous for vice in general and total want of principle. He is said to have died with this prayer in his mouth, "If there is a God, I desire he may have mercy on me.,"—Hobbes wrote his Leviathan to serve the cause of Charles I; but finding him likely to fail of success, he turned it to the defence of Cromwell, and made a merit of this fact to the usurper, as Hobbes himself unblushingly declared to Lord Clarendon.

Need I describe Voltaire—prince of scoffers, as Hume was prince of sceptics; in childhood initiated into infidelity; in boyhood, infamous for daring blasphemy; in manhood, distinguished for cold-blooded disruption of all the ties and decencies of the family circle; for the ridicule of whatever was affecting, & the violation of whatever was confidential. Ever increasing in duplicity and hypocritical management, with age and practice—those whom his wit attracted and his buffoonery amused, were either disgusted or polluted by his loathsome vices. Lies and oaths in their support were nothing to him. Those whom he called his friends, he took pains secretly to calumniate; flattering them to their faces, and ridiculing and reviling them behind their backs. Years only added stiffness to the disgusting features of his impiety, coldness to his dark malignity, and fury to his impetuous temper. Throughout life he was given up to work all uncleanness with greediness." Such was the witty Voltaire, who, in the midst of all his levity, bad feeling and seriousness enough to wish he had never been born—Dwight.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

RECEIPTS FOR CURING MEAT.—The hams of Maryland and Virginia have long enjoyed a wide celebrity. At last year's exhibition of the Maryland State Agricultural Society, four premiums were awarded for hams.—The one that took the first premium, was cured by Mr. T. E. Hamilton, from the following receipt:

To every 100 lbs. of pork take 8 lbs. of salt, 2 oz. saltpetre, 2 lbs. brown sugar, 1½ oz. of potash, and four gallons of water. Mix the above, and pour the brine over the meat, after it has lain in the tub for two days. Let the hams remain six weeks in the brine, and then dry several days before smoking. I have generally had the meat rubbed with fine salt, when it is packed down. The meat should be perfectly cool before sacking.

THE NEWBOLD RECEIPT.—The following is the famous Newbold receipt, which has acquired so much celebrity:

Seven lbs. coarse salt, 5 lbs. brown sugar, 2 oz. pearlash, 4 gallons of water.—Boil all together, and skim the pickle well when cold.—Put it on the meat. Hams to remain in 3 weeks—beef 3 weeks. The above is for 100 lbs. weight.

Barber-Shop Poetry.

AIR—"Box Bolt."

Oh, don't you remember Lew Ransom, friend Joe,
Lew Ransom the Barber up-town,
Who makes wild delight, when you give him a call,
And does up his shaving so brown.

In the neat barber shop on Main-street, friend Joe,
Beneath the old green house so fine,
He has fitted up his chair with soaps of every scent,
And the striped pole is his sign.

Upon his soft cushioned chair, old Joe,
Just stretch wide its arms for us all,
Together we've sat in the noon day time,
And enjoyed while he shaved us so well.

Many Barbers have tried in vain, old Joe,
But their efforts can never compare;
For the customers flock around the shop to see
How tastefully he clips off the hair.

There's a change in the times I know, friend Joe,
They have changed from the old to the new,
And I feel in the depths of my pocket the truth
That prices down town of have chang'd too.

Four years have passed, or more, old Joe,
Since Lew Ransom's dance was first hail'd,
And his shop is deemed a blessing in truth,
For to please he has never yet failed.
