SENATE—RESOLUTIONS OFFERED—PASSAGE OF THE BILL FOR THE BETTER ORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY—THE CHOLERA RESOLUTION—THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Mr. Grimes presented the joint resolution of the Iowa legislature for the establishment of a national bureau of education, which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. Conness offered a resolution directing the committee on printing to report on the expediency of providing against the suppression or alteration of speeches in the Globe, which was laid over.

BILL TO REORGANIZE THE PAY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. Grimes called up the joint resolution to carry into immediate effect the bill to provide for the better organization of the pay department of the navy, which provides as follows:

1. That, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of an act to provide for the better organization of the pay department of the navy, with the least delay possible, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to waive the examination of such officers of the pay department of the navy as are on duty abroad, and cannot be examined by law; provided that such examinations as are required by law shall be made as soon as practicable after the return of such officers to the United States, and no officer found to be disqualified shall receive that promotion contemplated in the act herein referred to.

2. And be it further resolved, That the secretary of the navy be and he is hereby authorized to retain or to appoint, under existing laws and regulations, such volunteer officers in the navy as the exigencies of the service may require, until their services can be supplied by graduates from the naval academy.

Mr. Grimes offered an amendment, which was adopted, that hereafter naval constructors shall be staff officers of the navy.

The resolution as amended was passed.

THE CHOLERA RESOLUTION.

Mr. Chandler called up the joint resolution to prevent the introduction of cholera into the United States. The question was upon the motion of Mr. Edwards, changing the provisions in regard to the establishment of quarantine by the secretaries of war, the navy and the treasury, from direction to authorization, and providing that they may do so, instead of that they shall do so.

Mr. Sumner amended the proposition to make it read, "It shall be the duty of the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, to adopt a system," etc.

The morning hour expired pending the discussion on this subject, and

THE POSTOFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Was taken up, the pending question being on Mr. Trumbull's amendment.

Mr. Howard said that this discussion had taken a very wide range. It has been declared during this discussion that the so-called policy of the President of the United States, who holds his office by virtue of the Constitution, and by reason of the death of President Lincoln, is the same policy initiated and endeavored to be carried out by the lamented Lincoln, and we have been told by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, (Mr. Doolittle,) and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, (Mr. Cowan,) in energetic and emphatic terms, that this policy is the identical policy of Mr. Lincoln. In regard to the reconstruction of the rebel States, I take issue, sir, with these honorable Senators upon this question of fact, and I deny that the policy of President Johnson is identically the policy of President Lincoln. Upon that grave and important subject, I shall show, or endeavor to show, that the two kinds of policies, that of Mr. Lincoln and that of Mr. Johnson, are, in point of principle, as wide apart as the poles: that while, on the one side, there is the assertion on the part of President Johnson of the absolute power of the executive of this nation to interfere for the restoration of the so-called rebel States, on the other hand it is asserted in his behalf he has this omnipotent power, and that it does not belong to Congress. Mr. Lincoln always repudiated that idea, and was ever careful to protest that he, as the executive branch of the government, possessed no real power on the subject of the admission of the rebel States in Congress. Now, sir, let us recall a little of the history of the past on this subject, and see the actual position occupied by Mr. Lincoln touching the power of Congress over the admission of Senators and Representatives from rebel States into Congress. But before I come to that, sir, let us, if possible, ascertain what this policy of Mr. Lincoln actually was; let us entertain clear ideas upon this subject, and ascertain what is the real controversy between the President and the announcement of Mr. Johnson upon the subject of reconstruction. It is, of course, to be found in the most solemn paper which he ever signed, and that is his message at the opening of the present session. It assumes and asserts it to be the power of the President to appoint provisional governors of the rebel States and to give them authority to call conventions in them. This, sir, is claimed as an executive power, and that it is derived from the Constitution. The power which he proceeded to exercise at an early period, in my judgment exists in no part of the Constitution. In this document he claims the right to recognize the governments as State governments, with all the powers, rights and privileges of States in the Union. In short, he claimed the power, as the executive of the United States, to make peace with the States once in insurrection. Sir, under what clause of the Constitution does the President of the United States have the power to proclaim and establish peace after a state of war had intervened, whether with a foreign country, with which we might happen to be at war, or with a State, or district, declared by Congress to be in insurrection. He has not the power under the Constitution to make war, and for the same reason he has no power under the Constitution to make peace, and Congress has never, in any statute which it has passed, given to the President of the United States any authority whatever to declare peace, even in regard to the rebel States. Gentlemen will look in vain for any such authority in the act of 1861.

The message completely ignores Congress and its authority, and puts the Executive as the only source of power over the rebel States. It does not propose to consult Congress at all on the subject of reconstruction, and takes as little pains to refer this subject to any other branch of it, or to Congress, as if there was no Congress, and, with singular coolness, asks the two Houses to judge, each for itself, of the election returns, as qualifications of its own members.

Mr. Howard said that he (President Johnson) had presumed to appoint provisional governors for the Southern States, and to impart the power to call conventions for the purpose of allowing those States to remodel their Constitutions and to enact laws to cover the whole field of State legislation.

The power exercised by the President in this matter was one of the most enormous usurpations of the power of Congress ever attempted. If the Congress of the United States should, at this moment, wink at this assumption—if they should not stand up here to assert their constitutional power over this most important branch of their duties—then he (Howard) looked forward to the time when the will of the Executive shall become the law of the land. The President should have called Congress together at the close of the war, instead of saying he (Andrew Johnson) was to say how the work of reconstruction was to be adopted.

Referring to Mr. Lincoln's plan of reconstruction, Mr. Howard said: Now, sir, let the name of Mr. Lincoln be no longer quoted here as being the author of this enormous usurpation, by which the law power of Congress over the subject of reconstruction is said to be absorbed into the single hand of the Executive.

In conclusion, Mr. Howard, referring to the condition of the Southern States, argued that the rebellion still exists, and like Buchanan, it would break out again. He could resist the intentions of the Executive, of which he had spoken while he had a seat in the body. If Congress was to be expelled by the point of the bayonet, as recommended by newspapers in the interest of the President, he, for one, would resist it. Not boasting of peculiar courage, he, (Mr. Howard,) would say, come on—I ask no favors—the first hand of violence laid upon a member of this body, or the other body, will be the signal for such an uprising among the Northern loyal masses as shall teach whoever he may be, who puts himself at the head of such a movement, that the people of the United States have not forgotten that they are still a free people, and they are represented and intend forever to be represented by a free American Congress.

Mr Cowan followed Mr. Howard, and defended President Johnson and his policy.

At the conclusion of Mr. Cowan's speech the question was taken upon the following amendment:

That no person exercising, or performing, or undertaking to exercise or perform any duties which, by law, are required to be filled by Congress, shall not, before confirmation, receive any compensation for his services, unless commissioned by the President to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, resignation, or expiration of term, during the recess of Congress and since its last adjournment.

The vote was as follows: Ayes 16, noes 23; so the amendment was disagreed to, and the bill was then passed.

The Senate then went into executive session, and soon after adjourned.

In the Hudson county court, New York, last week, Saml. Williams, a colored man, sued to recover $5000 damages for false imprisonment on a charge of having in his possession a stolen horse, which afterwards proved to belong to him. The jury believing that Williams had suffered more than $5000 worth, gave him a verdict for $15,000. Pretty good pay for being called a horse-thief.

Wolves have become so plenty in Rock Island county, Illinois, that the supervisors have raised a premium on scalps from $3 to $10.
