Dr. E. J. Dillon Praises Russian Policy as Proper Method

PRAISES PEACE REPLY

Noted Correspondent Refers to Russo-Japanese Negotiations as Evidence

New York, Oct. 15.

Dr. E. J. Dillon, who is on his way to Russia to act as the Russian correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, arrived at this port on Saturday and is at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel while awaiting steamship reservations for the last lap of his trip. Mr. Dillon expects to leave here soon on his mission and is engaged in completing some arrangements in New York and Philadelphia.

Doctor Dillon was one of the outstanding diplomatic figures during the Russian-Japanese War and is perhaps the best posted of all authorities on Russia as a country and as a commercial factor in the world's post-bellum commerce.

"Russia," said Doctor Dillon, "is too big a subject to treat from any one angle and apply that finding or belief to the entire country. There are so many nationalities and factions at work there. That and the fact that the country lacks unity of any kind makes is impossible to cast any prediction as to what the future holds in store for Russia.

"The great question now is, 'Can Russia be roused out of the comatose state into which she has fallen?' and my own opinion is that it will be exceedingly difficult, but that it can be done. I also think that the general lines upon which President Wilson has planned to help Russia are the right lines. That is to say, he has not only eschewed violence of any kind, but he has also declined to put any kind of pressure upon the people which they would be likely to resent.

Wilson's Policy Correct

"Russia will have to be restored by her own people. She may and must be helped by friends from without, but helped only in a friendly way. That, I believe, is the basis of President Wilson's policy toward Russia.

"I have just finished reading President Wilson's reply to the last German note and I believe the conditions he names are indispensable to permanent peace. I feel perfectly confident that we, on the other side, should have lost this war already had it not been for the intervention of the United States. The tide of battle has certainly turned since the dark days of last year. Having helped Europe so far and in so many ways, it is desirable that President Wilson should crown his work by enabling the Allies to achieve diplomatic unity.

"The fact that I am visiting the United States while she is at war causes me to cast my mind back thirteen years to the time I came here from St. Petersburg near the close of the Russo-Japanese War. I came then as the friend and adviser of Witte, the Russian plenipotentiary and chief of the mission sent to discuss peace terms with the Japanese delegation at Portsmouth.

"From the middle of the Atlantic, I dispatched the longest wireless message that ever had passed over the ocean. Besides being the longest, the message was also the most important that had been transmitted by wireless up to that time. It was transmitted by seven ships and was published by the London Daily Telegraph and various newspapers in the United States. It embodied an account of a conversation I had had with Witte, who wished me to put before the world his far from hopeful view of the errand on which he was coming and his appreciation that it might lead to nothing.

"Witte construed his mission as an inquiry into Japan's willingness to end the war on reasonable terms, and he ventured the opinion that Japan's notion of what was reasonable would differ so widely from Russia's view as to preclude the hope of an accord.

"That telegraphic message dampened the enthusiasm of friends of peace on both side of the Atlantic and seemed to warrant the pessimistic forecasts that were published in the press of St. Petersburg and Moscow, and by the time we reached New York the feeling was general that the peace conference would end in words and the war would go on much longer.

United States Deciding Factor

"But in these forecasts one important factor was left wholly out of consideration—the beneficent influence of the people of the United States. As soon as I had a conversation on the subject with the President at Oyster Bay I discerned at once the existence of the incalculable force of that factor, whereupon I took a much more favorable view of the work. Later on at Portsmouth the balance seemed to be in favor of going on with the war, and I was charged by Witte with the drafting of a telegram to the Czar announcing the failure of the negotiations and ascribing it to the Japanese. The specific weight of this American influence then made itself felt. The war scale rose immediately and the result of our conference was the peace which the civilized world so fully desired.

"Today a much more destructive war is raging. The civilization of the Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Slav races was not merely menaced but would have succumbed before this time had it not been for the generous intervention of the people of this great land, who have been and are contributing everything to the threatened cause. Today, however they are no longer merely a beneficent factor in a monstrous struggle. They are its deciding factor. The leadership of the Entente, of the civilized nations of the world, is passing to the United States. I am proud to reckon myself one of the pilgrims to what will be the new world in every sense of the term.

"I come to this country in a spirit of admiration and gratitude. It is true that America was not the first to formulate the fruitful doctrines which are about to constitute the ethical basis of the new ordering of the world, but she did more. She drew them from the dust of libraries into the sunlight of human interest and caused them to strike deep roots among the peoples of the earth. Fearlessly she threw herself across the mighty currents of evil that were sweeping away the mainstays of our culture and saved the noble heritage of mankind from ruin.

"Her conception of progress is spacious, lofty and systematic. It fills men with enthusiasm and impels them to efficacious endeavor. In order to realize these things in full for the well-being of the human race, all that would seem to be needed now is continuity of policy and perseverance."

U-BOAT THREAT OUT AGAIN

Climax of Ruthlessness This Winter, German Paper Says

By the Associated Press

Amsterdam, Oct. 15.—There is good reason to believe that the German submarine warfare will reach a climax during the winter, according to the Rhenish Westphalian Gazette, which says that it will produce an economic crisis of unanticipated dimensions in Entente countries.

LIEUT. FRANCIS C. LOGUE

Son of former Congressman J. Washington Logue, who died at sea on the way to France to fight the Germans

LOGUE'S SON DIES AT SEA

Lieutenant of Marines Prey to Pneumonia Aboard Ship

Lieutenant Francis C. Logue, U. S. M. C., 3906 Spruce street, died of pneumonia September 19 aboard a transport on the way to France, according to word received by his father, former Congressman J. Washington Logue.

Lieutenant Logue, who was twenty-two years old, was a member of the Thirteenth Regiment, United States Marines, and was at sea several days when stricken.

Enlisting in the marine corps as a private, Lieutenant Logue was sent to the officers' training school at Quantico, Fla., where he received his commission on August 16 of this year. He was born in Philadelphia, attending the public schools and later graduating from St. Joseph's College. Afterward he took a course at Notre Dame Institute, Ind., from which he graduated. Lieutenant Logue resided with his parents at 3906 Spruce street. His father, J. Washington Logue, is a prominent attorney and was a candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Lieutenant Thomas A. Logue is now in France with the First Pioneer Regiment.

Oversubscribe Loan, Is Cardinal Gibbons's Plea

Cardinal Gibbons has sent this message to the people of Philadelphia:

"Nothing must be allowed to interfere with our efforts in behalf of the fourth Liberty Loan. In common with other citizens who have the cause so much at heart, I look to see this loan oversubscribed. The patriotic citizens of Philadelphia have never yet failed in a crisis.

"The oversubscribing of the fourth Liberty Loan is a matter of great moment and importance. See to it, fellow citizens, that the call of the leaders meets with a full, generous and hearty response.

"JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS.

WILSON INSULTED BY BOCHE IN LAON

President Reviled by Germans as They Waged Progressive Pillage

"REQUISITIONED" LABOR

Women and Girls Had to Work and Accept Town's Debt as Pay

By the Associated Press

With the French Army in the Laon Area, Oct. 15.

The pillage of Laon was progressive. It began with the arrival of the first troops, who looted every house and building that was not inhabited at the time. Later on the pillage extended to houses that were inhabited. It reached its height on the departure of the general staff of the German army commanded by General von Heeringen.

Girls and men were taken from Laon and sent to prison camps in Germany and Russia as from other parts of northern France during 1917. They have since been sent home in accordance with the Berne agreement, but when the town was evacuated several hundred young men of fighting age were carried off with the mayor and Senator Thermant. Inhabitants say the Germans feared the Senator's revelations on the floor of the French Senate.

Insulted President

One of the crowning acts of the occupying troops was the insulting of President Wilson in a tract that was distributed profusely by German soldiers among the population. This document reads in part:

"It is now absolutely evident that the determination to kill comes from the White House at Washington and is concentrated in the person of President Wilson. It goes without saying that the doctor of philosophy, President, Democrat and humanitarian will be able to invent the best of reasons for continuing the war."

Then follows a diatribe against doctors of philosophy in general, coming back again to the American President in these terms: What difference is there anyway between Wilson, who has come out of the University of Philadelphia (Sic), and any kind of a Nero.

Compared to Caesar

"The first defends the thesis of the continuation of the war before the American Senate; the other justified each of his crimes before the Roman Senate. Both the President and Caesar had recourse to the same oratorical periods to defend their statesmanship."

The different officers commanding in the town pretended that the right of "requisition" extended to labor, and accordingly obliged men, women and children to labor for the German army in various ways. The requisitioned labor was paid for, as were requisitioned products—in orders upon the Mayor. The town, consequently, paid for the labor done by its citizens for the occupying forces. The girls were also obliged to go to the fields and gather nettles, from which the Germans made a fabric that served as a substitute for burlap in making sand sacks for their trench fortifications.

U. S. PUTS LID ON COFFEE [illegible]

People Warned Against [illegible] and Overconfidence

Washington, Oct. 15.—To adjust coffee imports with shipping conditions and to ensure the supplies necessary for home consumption, control of the importation of coffee has been taken over by the Sugar Equalization Board. Outstanding licenses have been revoked as to shipment after October 18.

Control of importation was arranged by agreement between the war trade board and the food administration, announcing the arrangement today. The food administration said rationing is not contemplated, but that the people will be expected to reduce consumption by careful avoidance of all waste and overindulgence and by careful preparation of coffee for the table.

Clergymen to Protest Church Closing

Protest against the order closing the churches on Sunday because of influenza will be made this afternoon by clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania. They will meet at 2:30 o'clock in the Church House, Twelfth and Walnut streets and report their views to Bishop Rhinelander.

LOUDEN

Overhead Carrying System

LET ONE MAN DO THE WORK OF FIVE

No matter what your carrying problems are, the Louden Overhead Carrier will solve them. It does the work cheaper, quicker and with less labor. One man can do the work of five—no trucks, carts or wheelbarrows—no wear and tear on floors—no congestion.

The Louden Carrier can be bought for short, straight hauls of a few feet, or for the most complex handling of materials, involving switches, curves and turntables. The cost is exceedingly low—about 70c a foot complete, and your own men can install it.

Write today for illustrated catalog showing how it is being used successfully in many lines of industry.
