There was never a time when sound and thorough Christian education was more needed than now, for there was never a time of greated peril to the young. The wonderful and material progress of the age has multiplied the sources of wealth, the means of indulgence, and the tendencies to a sensual, earth-bound life. The popular fallacies, shallow negations and reckless ironies of our modern life have struck at the very roots of reverence and faith. The spirit of license and innovation is abroad, and infidelity, like the pestilence that walketh in darkness, makes itself felt at every pore of the moral and social system. Old and time-honored institutions have been abandoned, outward safeguards have been broken down, and hence the greater need for inward safeguards, such as come from the molding and controlling power of a vital faith in God and a character built upon the eternal verities of his word.

The star of hope for the temperance cause hangs over the school house. If we save the children to-day, we shall have saved the nation to-morrow.

We should enjoy more peace if we did not busy ourselves with the words and deeds of other men, which appertain not to our charge.

A good many people don't accomplish anything because they try to do too much. Don't take a sledge hammer to crack a peanut.

Cultivate a gentle, even temper. The man who flies into a passion upon every provocation, is like a wasp, senseless and exceedingly annoying.

Head faith believes Christ died for everybody, and lets it go at that. Heart faith believes he died for me, and adores him for it.

Nothing but the right can ever be expedient, since that can never be true expediency which would sacrifice a great good to a less.

It is not great deeds but faithful lives that God rewards.

Fall Planting of Trees.

If trees are to be planted in the fall, the earlier it is done the better, provided, of course, the wood is thoroughly matured. The tree may be taken up even before the frost has stripped it of its leaves, provided this work is done by hand. If planted out in September while the soil is still warm, new roots will put forth, and the tree will become well established for winter. It will not do to strip the leaves from trees that are not to be transplanted, as it will start the buds at their base, which ought not to grow until next spring. But the checks of transplanting prevents any danger of this, and in a late fall may be an advantage, as it prevents the premature swelling of buds that often makes the tree winter kill.—Exchange.—This writer is all wrong on tree-planting. In the Spring, after the buds have swelled, is the time. The nursery people say that the fall is the best time. They mean that is the best time to sell, as few people have money in the Spring.

If the believer who thinks that his pathway through life is of unusual roughness will only look, he will see the tracks of thousands of others who have gone along exactly the same road.

Nothing at times is more expressive than silence.

The Size of the Sun.

The sun, provided we measure only the disk seen with the smoked glass, is eight hundred and sixty-six thousand miles in diameter, i, e., one hundred and eight earths could be comfortably ranged side by side across the disk. To cover the surface would require many thousands. To fill the interior we should need one million three hundred thousand. On a smaller scale we might represent the sun by a ball two feet in diameter and the earth by a good-sized grain of shot. Let the sun be hollowed out, then place the earth at its centre, and let the moon revolve about it at its real distance of two hundred and forty thousand miles. There would yet remain nearly two hundred thousand miles of space between the moon's orbit and the inclosing shell of the sun. Indeed, to journey from one side of the sun to the other, through the centre, would take one of our swiftest express trains nearly two years and a half. So vast a globe must be heavy. Since its density is only one-quarter that of the earth, it only weighs as much as three hundred and thirty-two thousand earths or two octillions of tons! The attraction of gravity on its surface would cause a man whose weight was one hundred and fifty pounds to weigh two tons.

Heavy sorrow is silent, and the deepest mourning is the most solitary.
