Baby's on a Strike.

Oh, insurrection, anarchy,
Revolt are in the air!
Our only baby's up in arms,
And nurse is in despair.

He lords it with a hand that's high
And mighty, though a mite;
He screams and cries and drives his ma
To desperation quite.

He sits enthroned a little czar,
Tied into his high chair;
His awful nod says plain as words,
"I won't be good, so there!"

By sisters, cousins, aunts and all
Cajoled caressed and kissed,
He will not budge an inch, this bold,
Young, budding anarchist.

Who shall subdue this pest'lent
But precious little tyke?
What's to be said, what's to be done
When baby's on a strike?
—Boston Globe.

She Read His Mind.

"This mind-reading of which I hear,
It puzzles me completely."
She looked up at her bashful beau,
And said, as she smiled sweetly,
"Why, I can read your mind with ease."
"You can, indeed? Then do so."
"You wish that I would marry you
But you're afraid to say so."
—Harper's Bazar.

Obituary.

Dallas Christian Advocate—by request.

HANKLA.—Died, Mrs. Ellen Hankla, at the house of her husband, in Caldwell county, Texas, March 29, 1888, in the forty-third year of her age, being born in Amsterdam, Botetourt county, Va., August 24, 1845; came to Texas with her father, Rev. Gideon Scherer, who was a Lutheran minister, in 1853. Mr. Scherer settled in Columbus, Colorado county, and organized there the first English Lutheran Church. Here young Ellen was reared, and here she joined the church of her father. She was first married to Joel R. Carlton, February 21, 1865; by this marriage she had two children, Emmett H. and Irma May. Both these children survive the mother. In 1873, with her husband, she removed to San Marcos, with a hope that by a change and rest from the busy life of a banker, Bro. Carlton might be saved from that fell destroyer—consumption. At San Marcos she joined the M. E. Church, South, with her husband. It was at their beautiful home here that Bro. Carlton died in 1876. Soon after this sad event she visited Virginia and remained for some time. She took her church certificate with her and there united with her old church for the time being. She was again married in 1879, October 14, to John B. Hankla, than whom a more tender, affectionate husband never lived. His devotion to her in her last sickness was phenomenal. Everything that could be done for her he cheerfully did. He was found at her bedside almost continually. She died of consumption. Of this last marriage two children were born Mabel B. and Mirta A. On the return of the family to Texas, she connected herself with her old church in San Marcos; was transferred to the Kyle circuit, in which charge she died. Sister H. came of a preacher family. Her grandfather, her father, two uncles and several nephews were, and are ministers of the gospel. She kept rather a voluminous journal, and her bereaved husband finds pleasure in noting her religious sentiments and feelings recorded there. She bemoans her want of faithfulness and prays to God for more patience and grace. She urges her children to love God and not forget their duty to the church; wants them to be charitable and disburse their means for the cause of humanity as God prospers them. She believed that God controlled in all things and constantly prayed for divine direction. These things she wrote down in her journal. She was willing for her mature thoughts on the special providence of God to go to record. She asked direction of God in everything. I visited her often, and to my questions as to her religious prospects she would sometimes complain at herself for her fretfulness. She seemed angry at herself for her want of patience. "I am so much troubled; better for me to die. I feel ready at any time." She sent for me a few days before she died. I lived ten miles away, and when I arrived she sent all out of the room, and then told me there was an unaccountable cloud in her way. I told her that was not remarkable. "Remember Bunyan's Pilgrim. The enemy pursued him half way across the river. God will brush that cloud away, sister. Hold to the Master. The believer in Jesus gets the victory." She took courage, and together, alone we called upon God. The cloud came no more. Sister H. belonged to the benevolent societies of her church, and when her family duties and her health allowed, attended the meetings. She was a devoted friend of the prohibition movement. Earnestly desired to see her sex relieved of the curse of intemperance. Died believing in its final triumph. She was in her right mind when she died. In this the prayer of her husband was answered. She told him, even when dying, she knew she was going, but that she was going home to Heaven. She wanted the children all called in and gave them her parting blessing and parting kiss. This notice would be incomplete if I did not mention the devotion of her sister, Mrs. Bettie Ramsey, of Dallas. For more than two months she remained with her, and saw her breathe her last. Death was almost without a struggle. She quietly fell asleep, and rests from life's toils, waiting for the resurrection of the just. Her brother from Chambers county came in time to see her before she died; but the one living in Dallas came too late. Let him so live that he may see her in the glory land. W. J. JOYCE.

EX-SENATOR S. B. MAXEY

Reads the Democratic Party a Lecture on the Proposed Heart-of-Oak Plank.

To the News.

DALLAS, TEX., May 5.—I herewith inclose a copy of a letter received by me from the Hon. S. B. Maxey containing his views as to the course to be pursued by the next Democratic State Convention on the prohibition question. As his views on this question will doubtless be of interest to the public I inclose you a copy for publication. By giving it space in your next issue you will oblige, yours truly, W. R. STOUT.

PARIS, TEX., April 30.—W. R. Stout, Esq., Dallas, Tex.: DEAR SIR—Your favor of yesterday is just received.

From a strictly Democratic standpoint, looking alone to the unity and harmony of the party and the maintenance of its vital principles, it is perfectly manifest that the injection of the question of prohibition or anti-prohibition into the councils of the party would be supreme folly.

It might help ambitious aspirants, but the party is not specially concerned about them.

No one of ordinary intelligence can fail to observe that there is a spirit of unrest among the people, brought about, I believe, by men who look to their own aggrandisement rather than to the good of the country.

Nevertheless whatever may be the cause the fact remains.

We are confronted with

1. The National Prohibition party, and those who believe that prohibition is the paramount question, above all other considerations, will go with that party.
2. The Labor party.
3. The meeting called for some undisclosed purpose to meet at Waco.
4. The Republican party.

In its recent State convention, largely attended by its best elements, the Republican party proclaimed that, whilst it does not expect to overcome just now the great Democratic majority, it does believe it practicable to capture one or two districts in Texas, and this, evidently, upon what it assumes to be discontent of the wool growing industry.

It wisely selected Dr. Cochran, the great leader of the anti-prohibitionists in the recent canvass, as president pro tem, and Gen. Web Flanagan, the most influential prohibitionist in the Republican party, as permanent president of the convention.

They and Judge Rector warned the party against raising the prohibition question, as it would disrupt the party, and the convention wisely followed their advice. Whatever we may think of the principle of that party, no one doubts its skill in methods looking to success.

Some few Democrats seek to insert in the next State platform what they style the heart-of-oak plank. Their arguments are specious, plausible and transparently selfish, but utterly unsound.

If the convention should foolishly follow them it would deal the most fatal blow to Democracy ever struck in the household of its friends. "Art thou in health, my brother?" and a stab under the fifth rib.

We had best let the old party move as heretofore under its old flag and well-known principles. Democrats equal in intelligence, in past record and in fealty to any who advocate the new-fangled doctrine, do not believe that a man's opinions on that question, one way or another, have anything to do with his Democracy. And these men have proved their party devotion in the darkest hours of its history.

They are not deceived as to the motives of this new departure, nor do they propose to be browbeaten or bulldozed.

Claiming the right to think and act as they please on all outside questions, they concede the same right to all others, and it will be found that the great body of Democrats, whether pro or anti, take the same view. They do not propose to follow the blind leadership of a few self-constituted leaders, to the injury of the party upon whose success depends the perpetuity of free government upon the principles of the constitution.

The unfortunate split in the Charleston Convention in 1860, and other events that might be named, should teach sensible men that coercion is a dangerous weapon.

The Democratic party cannot afford to slap in the face 100,000 of its fellow Democrats for difference of opinion on an outside issue, who never failed when the long roll was beaten.

I have no fear that the convention will do anything so foolish. There is too much intelligence and fairmindedness to tolerate such gross injustice and palpable folly.

Very truly, S. B. MAXEY.
