What Oxford Has.

We hope that the 1600 readers of THE EAGLE, not including the papers of the State, who also read this journal, will not think that Oxford has gone out of business and in reality become merely a way station on the great Illinois Central Railway. While we do not receive a farthing for this information, it brings a blush of shame to feel that our community is so misrepresented.

Therefore, without money and and without price, we will state that we have 50 business houses in this town, besides minor establishments. Look over our columns and see if you call the showing made in them of the various enterprises, as an evidence of overflowing public spirit Outside of the few firms who have cards and a few special notices in the paper, every other line is gratis.

It would be gratifying to the management of any newspaper to be ever on the alert, and to always speak out in defense of the best interests of its own town, but when the citizens of a town expect you to run a paper for public convenience and support yourself without any patronage whatever, it is not calculated to make you very enthusiastic or overflowing with public spirit. Besides it is impossible to give the same service and publish as good a paper in an unresponsive community, that does not patronize you enough to keep you in breakfast foods, as it would be if your efforts were appreciated. But THE EAGLE will go on just the same and will remember its friends and—others.

This paper is not out for charity—does not want a dollar from any individual that is not repaid in double measure.

THE DEAD.

MRS. JACK SLAUGHTER.

Mrs. Jack Slaughter died in the Asylum at Jackson Monday, and the remains were brought to Oxford on the evening train and carried to her home seven miles North of town for interment. Mrs. Slaughter has been in feeble health the past two years and it was finally decided to carry her where she could receive medical care and attention. She had been in Jackson about six months, but her condition did not improve. The deepest sympathy is felt for the bereaved husband and children in the loss of a devoted wife and loving mother.

The Fever Situation.

The fever situation shows some improvement, but the danger has by no means passed yet. The warm days and cool nights are not calculated to help the situation, especially in Louisiana, where the disease is raging the worst.

Tuesday's report gave New Orleans 31 new cases and 5 deaths. total cases to date 2,898 and total deaths 375.

Port Gibson has one case of fever Natchez, 8 cases and 1 death, Hamburg 3 cases, Roxie no new cases, Vicksburg 4 cases, Mississippi City 4 cases, Gulfport 1 new case.

Oct. 7th is generally conceded the date for a frost in this section and the quarantine will be raised by Oct. 15th.
