GOOD FARM BUILDINGS

Materials for Cow Houses, Stables and Pigstyes.

Floor of Structure Intended for Accommodation of Live Stock Should Be Impermeable and Non-Absorbent as Possible.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

Since the introduction of Portland cement concrete as a floor-laying material there has been no excuse for uncomfortable and inefficient floors at the homestead. To be efficient, the floor of a house intended for the accommodation of live stock must be as great a degree as possible both impermeable and non-absorbent. If it is neither, it will be liable to become offensive itself, and will lead to the same condition in the soil upon which it lies as well. Fluctuations in ground quality and finish and flooring tiles may reach a high standard in these respects, but unless they are very carefully joined liquid matter will leak through the seams and pollute the soil underneath. It is with such a floor it is difficult to keep the subsoil wholesome, it need never be attempted with irregularly finished slabs, far less with small boulders, as paving stones. Concrete can, however, be laid with out joint or crack in the whole area covered. It is impervious to water; moisture cannot pass down through it, nor can ground water pass up. It can be worked into forms required in such places, and it wears well. A further advantage is its comparative cheapness. Another is the effective resistance that it gives to rats; these animals "sappers and miners" are not completed when faced by a well-laid concrete floor.

Open channels alone are permissible in the buildings we are dealing with; covered drains can never be kept sanitary in these places—not, at any rate under the treatment it is found practicable to bestow upon them there. Here, again, concrete comes to the front on account of the regularity and smoothness of outline it is possible to give them in that material. A concrete channel can be effectively swept or scraped with ease, and a bucket or two of water swilled along its course will leave it comparatively sweet and clean.

Limitations of Concrete. While concrete is eminently well adapted for flooring the parts of farm buildings that are liable to be soiled by the feet of animals, it is not so well suited for their stalls or lairs. It is all right as regards smoothness, but it seems to be too cold for both cows and pigs to lie upon unless abundance of bedding or litter is at the disposal of the animals. When heavy horses come it is hardly durable enough; the pounding of their iron-bound heels are too much for concrete. The passages and channels of the three places we started with can have their better flooring medium than concrete, but something a little warmer and less unyielding is required for both cows and pigs to lie upon. Horses might be left to take advantage of its smoothness were it more durable against their heels, because they usually have more bedding afforded them and they have less time to lie down.

Brick Pavement
Makes a very suitable floor for the cow's stall, and it answers equally well for the pig's stall. Well shaped building bricks laid on a bed of lime or cement serve the purpose admirably. The cows can never soil their stall floors, provided the building is arranged to meet their requirements; neither do the pigs mess their sleeping place provided it is kept clear of the rest of the floor space. At this rate there is not much likelihood of the soil beneath the brick pavement ever getting contaminated by excrement matter, even when the bricks are simply bedded on sand or ashes and are not grouted. But when bedded on lime and grouted with cement, a firm sound job is the result, and a surface of this sort will respond to a swilling with water as readily as the parts of the floor in concrete do.

Stable Stalls.
Something harder than brick is of course required for the stable stall. "Setts" or paving blocks, either of granite or whin, say six-by-six-inch suit very well. Bedding them in lime and grouting them in cement, both are advised for the brick pavement, make a strong job. This pavement may be kept two feet or so back from the wall that the horses face against, but it should be continued to the one side or other of the channel behind the horses. Concrete comes in very suitable for the remainder of the floor. The narrow strip in front, if laid with it, keeps rats at defiance. Rats are always sure of something in the stable stalls, but they will not venture there unless they are free to shelter in the floor beneath.

Fig. 1 is a cross-section of a floor such as we are describing. It shows a building 18 feet wide inside. It may be more; to make it less is not advisable. The stable, as well as the cowhouse and pigstye, should, as we have already said, be without covered drains inside. As far as practicable, one should make an open channel serve to carry away liquid matter from the stable. There is never so much urine from horses as from the cows, however; but there is usually more fall given in the stalls of the stables than in those of the cowhouse, and the stances for the geldings have to be floored in such a way that the urine from a person tumbles down, and led to the gutter. It is sometimes necessary, however, to make use of short lengths of these.

FEW REASONS FOR LAUGHTER

English Physician Advances Opinion Which Many Will Be Slow to Indorse.

An English physician, Doctor McDougal, has advanced an entirely new theory as to the cause and reason for laughter. He starts with the admitted fact that we laugh easily when a man sits down on his own hat, or does some other equally painful thing. It is difficult for us to restrain our risibility when a person tumbles down, even though in the next moment we may be very sorry for the hurt that he or she has suffered.

From these instances the doctor concludes that laughter is really an invention of nature to serve as an antidote to sympathy, which is painful. If we could not laugh, we would cry much more frequently, and the nervous excitement would be most baneful. But when we laugh the circulation is increased, the respiratory apparatus and the system is generally toned up. If we did not laugh we would become so depressed in the course of a short time that death or insanity would supervene.

The smile and the laugh, he holds, are different, even in kind, for he points to the fact that babies smile from three weeks old, but do not laugh until they are at least three months old or more. If this be true, it will change the views of many psychologists, who have long believed that smiling was only the earliest manifestation of risibility, and that laughter followed from a sense of sympathy.

If laughter be the antidote to sympathy, we must always laugh at and never with any one, which is hardly likely to prove true. The doctor may be a keen observer, but he will hardly be credited with any great philosophical power, for every one else would be wrong and he alone right.

If he be correctly reported, he has omitted much that goes to make up laughter, which is always the result of trying to avoid pain. In fact, it is much more frequently a sympathetic act, and is well known to be an imitative action, for we often laugh when others laugh.

Sneezing.
"It is worth remembering," says the Woodbury Reporter, "that a sneeze may always be suppressed by a firm pressure on the nose shutting off the wind." It is better worth knowing, and remembering that though a sneeze may take the form of an unseemly disturbance of a dignified occasion, it is too beneficial a provision of nature to be suppressed.

The Greeks, we know, accepted a sneeze as a favorable omen. For a long time we called them superstitious and laughed at them for thinking so. If we use our modern knowledge as to the nature and purpose of a sneeze, we shall stop calling them superstitious and deem them prophets. Physiologically considered, a sneeze is a spontaneous action by which nature ejects a foreign substance, such as dust, from the sensitive membrane of the nose. In these days we are coming to understand that what we used to think merely irritating dust is often a compound of many harmful germs. Let them, they enter the human system and do injurious or deadly work. Ejected by a sneeze—they are often passed on to somebody else.

Mother's Pension.
Criticism of the mother's pension law during the first few months of its operation may very easily be premature and unfair. The fact that counties are finding the payment of these pensions a burden may account for a great deal of it. This, however, does not disturb the fact that the law was passed in response to an alleged public demand, after full discussion. The frequent statement is made by county officials that the law operated the door to fraud and improvidence. The same statement was made regarding the industrial insurance law. The same criticism is characteristic of almost all of our recent legislation of a paternal character. It is not the fault, however, of the law that attempts are made to impose on the generosity or bounty of the public purse.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Making Capital.
The New Reporter going to the telephone and ostentatiously starting the machinery—"Hello! Central! Let me have 2745 C, please. (A pause.) You Giddy Little thing! No, I said twenty-seven. Twenty-seven. Hello! Is that 2745 C? Is Mr. Sartorius Devo in the office? Will you tell him that Mr. Jefferson McAddister would like to speak with him? Yes, that's the name. McAddister, Journalist. The other reporters listen in awe-struck silence.

The New Reporter—"Is this really Mr. Devo? My name is— Ah, you recognize my voice? You perhaps remember that I interviewed you yesterday. What's that? Best report? Oh, thank you! You're very kind. I tried to make it so. Has anything turned up in regard to that case since now? Well, sorry to trouble you. Eh? Dint? You're extremely kind. (Sings) At Sherry's? What? And a bottle? (Sings) I've awfully kind of you. Well, say, Tue. day, at eight. You really—(City Editor (in his every-day voice)—I have some work here, McAddister, when you are quite through talking to yourself. That telephone has been disconnected since morning.—Puck.

Very Simple.
The great detective climbed through the kitchen window, followed by his faithful assistant.
"Ah!" he exclaimed, surveying the surroundings, "I find that his wife is away!"
"How long has she been away?"
"Exactly 30 days."
"And how on earth do you know that?"
"By the unwashed dishes and cups and saucers. There are 30 of each of all, which shows that he used three a day for 30 days, and left them there to wash when she comes home—same as we all do. Simplest thing in the world."

'Twas Up to Her.
Mr. and Mrs. Nagz were visiting friends in Brooklyn, and several times were imported to visit, before they left, Greenwood cemetery, called the most beautiful burial grounds in the country.
But one thing or another hindered, and as their visit drew to a close, Mrs. Nagz said: "Henry, when are you going to take me to the cemetery?"
Mr. Nagz, who had not yet recovered from the effects of a scolding administered not long before, modestly replied:
"With pleasure, my dear, whenever you're ready."

Dairy Calf Often Overlooked.
Many dairymen and farmers fail to appreciate the great importance of spending thought and feed in the development of the dairy calf during the first six months of its life.
Wees in the "Movie" Business, Too.
Downtown theatrical managers who have to deal with jealous actresses and fussy stars, and exercise diplomacy a thousand times a day, need not think the lesser "movie" managers haven't troubles of their own, says the Kansas City Star. "In all my experience in the show business," remarked the manager of a motion picture place on Thirty-first street, "I never had such a time as I had last night. I have two machines. One of them lost the governor belt, the other snapped a tension; three keys on the piano stuck, and the trap drummer broke the head of the snare drum."
