FARMERS' DAY AT THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Record Breaking Attendance Expected On May 29th, When Farmers Will Visit Their Agricultural College and Experiment Station.

Following an attendance last year of over five hundred farmers and farm women, Farmers' Day at the Agricultural College on May 29th, promises to draw a record breaking crowd. During the past year, farmers throughout the State have shown much increased interest in the work of their Agricultural College, and it is expected that many organizations will send representatives to report on the progress the College and Experiment Station have made during the past year in promoting agricultural development.

There is probably no time of the year when a greater variety of work can be seen in progress at the Agricultural College and Experiment Station. Crops are sufficiently advanced to show the differences which have been brought out by selection, fertilizing, liming, etc. As a result, the farmer who has been told, for instance, that top dressing of grass lands improves the grass yield, can see for himself the difference between the land on which fertilizer has been applied and that which has been left to make a natural growth. He will also see for himself the results of experiments with wheat, winter oats and other cereals, and will leave the College at the end of the day with a better understanding of the work that is being done for him and for his neighbors.

The men in charge of the various departments will be constantly in attendance and will cooperate with the County Agents and other guides who have been selected, to bring the various lines of work to the attention of visitors. There will be an inspection of the dairy barns, the poultry plant, the Experiment Station great houses, and the hog cholera serum laboratories, where the farmer can gain an idea of what is being done to improve live stock conditions on the farm, to test various feeds for poultry and in the investigation of truck and fruit diseases that we have learned to control by scientific methods of spraying. He will also witness the demonstration of the use of hog cholera serum to prevent the spread of that disease, and it is hoped in many ways he will become familiar with the various methods which the Agricultural College uses for bringing information of value to the attention of the country people of the State.

The picnic lunch to be served by the College authorities, will afford a pleasant opportunity for farmers and farm women from all parts of the State to mingle in a social hour and exchange views concerning the work of the Agricultural College and the development of the rural life of their respective neighborhoods. Farmers' Day affords a splendid opportunity for the rural people of the State to get together and become more strongly united in the improvement of agricultural conditions in this State. It is expected that every county in the State will send a strong representative delegation to take part in making the day a red letter occasion in the agricultural history of 1915.

RID THE FARM HOUSE OF THE FLY NUISANCE--CLEAN UP.

T. B. SYMONS,
Maryland Agricultural College.

It is most important to kill the early appearing flies and to remove their breeding places. The task of combating the pest in rural districts around farm houses is largely an individual one and its presence in large numbers or to a limited extent will depend upon the sanitary conditions that are maintained around the house and barn.

Since house flies may carry germs of typhoid fever, dysentery, tuberculosis and other diseases, we would do well to observe the following rules:

1. Keep flies from breeding (a) by hauling stable manure out each day and scattering it immediately over the fields, or (b) by putting the manure in a vault or screened room.
2. Keep all outhouses from breeding or contaminating flies.
3. Keep all fifth and garbage in closed receptacles.
4. Screen all foods exposed for sale.
5. Do not let flies come in contact with food.
6. Screen all doors and windows, especially those of kitchens and dining rooms.
7. Notify the Health Department at once of a nuisance in your neighborhood.
8. Let all unite in fighting the pest.

Taking a Chance.
A Cleveland woman writes to a newspaper: "I have lost my husband. Can I marry again without waiting any specified time?" We would advise her against any such step. Suppose somebody should find her husband and bring him home!

That's All.
"I did not think you would associate with such a man." "I shan't associate with him much; I am merely going to marry him."

HIS SISTER'S CHUM

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE.

"Miss Nettleton will be at the 7:30 train. Be a good brother, and show her every attention!"

This was the telegram at which Roy Eastburn stood looking with a wry face.

It had been antedated by various letters, all from his sister, at Milburn, a hundred miles away--his married sister, Mrs. Nettie Douglas. Roy knew what it all meant. Miss Irene Nettleton was his sister's dearest school chum. Then, too, she was rich. Once only Roy had met her, a gawky, disagreeable, pure-bred girl of fifteen. That was five years ago. Even now the old dislike came to his mind.

"If Irene is bent upon a match, it won't work," he decided forcibly. "Miss Nettleton's manner may have changed, but the old-time selfish heart never!"

Like a dutiful brother, he went down in the depot at the time appointed. On the way he bought a dozen roses at a dollar apiece, a two-pound box of the choicest chocolates, half a dozen of the latest magazines and two railroad tickets to Milburn.

"That will occupy her till I deliver her safely into Sister Nettie's charge," he soliloquized. "Then I'll make my escape, some way."

Roy reached the depot half an hour before train time. His sister had forgotten to post him as to the difference between Miss Nettleton at fifteen and the same young lady at twenty. He fancied, however, their mutually looking for one another would bring things about all right.

Roy found himself all at sea regarding this. He spoke to two young ladies by mistake. He grew confused and anxious as ten, twenty, twenty-five minutes passed by. Then he moved out to the gate and scanned every young lady who passed through it.

"She hasn't come," he declared, as the conductor's sonorous, "All aboard!" rang out. The guard clicked the chain of the gate to hasten some late comers. The train was moving, the guard had pulled the gate shut, when a young lady in a tiered tulle rushed towards it.

"Ah, it must be Miss Nettleton at last!" Roy decided, but he traced no familiar features in the eager, excited face. He grabbed her arm.

"Quick!" he said simply, "the train is just pulling out. I have the tickets."

Breathlessly, the girl allowed him to rush her through the gate. They had caught the last car. Then the door locked against them, they stood on the rear platform of the coach and looked at one another.

As to Roy, he could scarcely realize that this dancing-eyed, jolly-faced girl beside him was the dowdy, sour-visaged Miss Nettleton to whom he had taken such an aversion five years previous. The conductor came and let them into the coach.

"If you please, let me take a seat in the shadow here," prettily pleaded the young girl. "I have a headache from hurrying so. The light hurts my eyes, too."

"Why, certainly," answered Roy, as he turned a seat and sat down opposite to her, laying aside his light overcoat and hat.

"Dear! I am quite chilly," shivered his companion. "It will pass away if I can rest for a little. May I?" and as he nodded promptly, she took up his overcoat and wrapped it about her. Then she asked him to place her hat in the rack overhead. When he had done this, he was surprised to see that she had appropriated his own broad-brimmed hat.

"It shades my poor, suffering eyes so splendidly," she explained, looking for all the world like some pretty boy as she snuggled into the corner of the seat.

"Well, she is an original!" commented Roy, a little wonderingly.

He passed the tickets to the conductor as he came along. That official was accompanied by two men. They looked like detectives. They scanned the various passengers sharply.

"Well," remarked one of them, as he reached the end of the coach, "she's not aboard this train. We'll get off at the junction and wait for the next one."

Abruptly as the train left the junction, Roy's sister dropped her well-worn hat. "While she was out trying to uplift the children of others another welfare worker came along and tried to uplift her children."--Louisville Courier-Journal.

Thought It Time to Stop.
"Why did your sister drop her well-worn hat?" "While she was out trying to uplift the children of others another welfare worker came along and tried to uplift her children."--Louisville Courier-Journal.

Daily Thought.
Good, food, honest work, a grateful conscience and a little pleasant chat before a man retires are worth all the possets and apothecary's drugs.--Stepenson.

At the County Fair.
"Why does the Light-house professor carry that large five-cent cigar in the corner of his mouth?" "It is bravado!" "Not at all. He uses that to balance weight."

NOT LIKE THE POLITICIAN

Statesman Well Said That Horses Required Sustaining Solid for Their Substance.

Representative F. W. Mondell of Wyoming is something of an orator, and when he gets to describing the glories of his state he lets himself out a link or two more than for ordinary occasions. Of course, Wyoming is a great state and the only one in which the cowboy is preserved alive in captivity, the species having become extinct elsewhere. But Mondell claims for his state all the glories of America and Europe, with several acres of the Garden of Eden chipped in for good measure.

One day when he was orating about Wyoming the matter got on Representative Swager Sherley's nerves. Sherley did not object to Mondell's praising his own boundless prairies and his fine climate, but when he came to making claims about fine horses, the soul of the Kentuckian rebelled.

"I would like to interrupt the gentleman from Wyoming for a moment," exclaimed Sherley. "I have no doubt that the climate of his state is all he claims for it. With horses it is different, however. In this case I must remind him that horses, unlike politicians, cannot live on air."

Only Slightly Feazed.
A party of New Yorkers were hunting in the "piney woods" of Georgia, and had as an attendant an old negro, whose fondness for big words is characteristic of the race. One of the hunters, knowing the old negro's bent, remarked to him:

"Uncle Mose, the indentations in terra firma in this locality render traveling in a vehicular conveyance without springs decidedly objectionable and painful anatomically. Don't you think so?"

Uncle Mose scratched his left ear a moment and replied, with a slow shake of his woolly head:

"Mistah Gawge, the enbrance ob you' words am big'm mah jurydiction."

Preparedness.
"My husband says we must look out for this unpreparedness for war," said Mrs. Rafferty.

"An' it's a courageous man your husband it," commented Mrs. Dolan. "He ought to know what he's talkin' about."

"It's far too courageous he is, Mrs. Dolan. He's always got a black eye or a cut lip that he likes to look at in the glass by way of remindin' himself of what the other fellow got."

What Danny needs is preparedness for peace.
