Northern Idaho.

Northern Idaho may be considered as that part of the territory lying north of the Snake and Salmon rivers. It includes the mining regions of the mountains that cross the territory along the line of Salmon river, and the great agricultural and pastoral country to the west and north of that range, as far as the Cœur de Alene range—a distance of perhaps, a hundred and fifty miles. This country is a part of what, in general terms, is known as the Palouse country. The line between Washington and Idaho running north from the mouth of Clearwater entirely through it. The country east is Idaho, that west, Washington. The Idaho portion is watered by the Clearwater and its branches, and the head of Palouse river, which flows into the Snake in Washington Territory. East and south of Clearwater and north of Snake and Salmon, is the great Camas Prairie, a country of five or six hundred square miles, and of great agricultural and pastoral capability, with great beauty and scenery. The soil is excellent, covered with the finest grass and yielding large crops of all the cereals. Most of this is the fine range known as Craig's Mountain, itself a vast pasture. The timber on this range, is pine, tamarack and fir, and the mountains are really grassy openings, rolling away in parks and lawns for miles. The Nez Perce Indian reservation includes a part of this range, and then extends westward to the Clearwater, and southward to the Snake river, and covers a most beautiful country. West of Clearwater, starting from Snake river at its mouth, is one of the finest agricultural regions west of the Rocky Mountains, extending northward for a hundred miles on both sides of the Idaho line. All grains grow in the greatest perfection. Stock thrive exceptionally well. There are homes for thousands of families here waiting their coming. As to climate, this may be truly said, though lying so far north, the entire country has an average temperature not colder than Virginia, with little or none of the sultriness in Summer of that state. The rainfall is slight, and not often does snow fall to any depth. Notwithstanding this, grain needs no irrigation. As to healthiness, this may challenge comparison with any other region. The country is rolling, the streams are clear and rapid, no stagnant pools, and literally no local causes for disease. The Northern Pacific railroad will pass directly through this portion of the country, giving it cheap connection with the commerce of the world; also the opening up of the Columbia river to free navigation, which ought to be soon accomplished. This will then be one of the most desirable portions of Idaho to settle in. In view of these facts many Oregonians are moving in this Fall and occupying the country. Lewiston is the principal town in North Idaho. It is situated at the mouth of the Clearwater and is at present the head of steamboat navigation. It does a thriving trade with the interior and will in the near future be a place of considerable commercial importance. The Lewiston TELLER, a spicy little newspaper, unfurling its banner upon the very verge of civilization, is owned and published here.—J. B. Wright, in Idahoan.

STAR PARLOR ORGAN

MANUFACTURED BY

ALLEGER, BOWLBY & CO.,
WASHINGTON N. J.

We claim that our organs are equal in every respect to any in market. The tone so closely resembles the

PIPE ORGAN TONE

that it is difficult to distinguish between the two. For power, sweetness of tone, elasticity of touch, style, finish, and durability, they

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

We use the Munroe patent organ reed which is acknowledged by the most competent judges, to be the BEST REED MANUFACTURED.

Our cases are all made of solid black walnut, thoroughly kiln-dried, and put up by skilled workmen, aided by the

MOST APPROVED MACHINERY,

run by steam power. With Bolt's wood carver, we cut all panels and mouldings on the solid wood, which adds greatly to the beauty as well as the durability of the organ.
