A Mob and a Mother.

It is a bright, serene and marvelous clear day in North Dakota. The prairie is checkered with grass and grain-fields. The little clumps of hand-planted trees are tossing their branches in the amber air. Now and then a bird chirps its roundelay, or a vagrant butterfly reels down a sunbeam and lights upon their leaves.

The little village where I am sojourning for a few brief, delightful days, lies steeped in sunlight, and a broad, brave sweep of undulating years lies between me and the hour when I was here before. Oh, that hour! It is branded as with burning irons into my brain, my heart, my soul!

I sat, that day, of all days in my life, at the door of the Northwood Headlight—a pe-per I was editing then. Suddenly I heard a cry of rage, pathos, despair, and springing to my feet I looked down the road to the westward, from whence it came.

A block of 50 men were standing in front of the jail —50 men in granger garb—50 men, with a hellish, terrible purpose in their hearts.
They had taken a prisoner from his cell. They had pulled him over the threshold into the street, where he laid on his back, panting with a rope round his slim, white, throat.

I remember that I stood as if one transfixed and turned to stone, while the mob started off, voiceless, dragging its victim through the dust.

Not a word was spoken—not one. The only sound that started the silence was the tramp, tramp, tramp, of the avengers and the awful moans of the poor, bloody, foaming creature haltered at their heels. Men women and children rushed to doors, windows and porticos as the hateful procession passed their lips sealed in speechless awe, their faces blanched at the atrocious spectacle.

Sick at heart, I turned back into my office, but when I went to my hotel in the twilight I saw a ghastly thing that God had made high swinging from a sycamore.

A storm sprang up at midnight. Lightning tore the skies into slivers of flame.
Thunders shook the world.
Ruin fell in fury, and the winds went shuddering through vast black voids.

And through it all the ghastly thing that God had made upon its gibbet swung!

In the midst of the tempest a train rolled up to the depot and left one passenger in this little town—an old woman, with soft, white hair, bloomy cheeks and sweet, bright, kindly, eyes. She went to the one hotel, registered and retired. The landlady met her in the morning and remarked.

"I hope you rested well, madam, for it was a rowdy storm we had."

"Oh, yes," said the old woman, with a sunbeam smile.
"I rested well, though it was,
as you say, a rowdy storm.
But I took a happy heart with me to bed, and it is a happy heart I have this morning, for I will meet my son today—my Cyril, whom I have not seen for seven years."

"Have you traveled far?"
"Yes, ma'am from Massachusetts," she said, running to the door. "But what is that?"

"Oh, it's a young man they lynched yistidy—a boss thief, they said—an they'er kerryin his body to the coroner's. 'Twas a shame, his hangin, fur he was a real handsome feller, perlite and clever, an I sez to Jeremiah —that's my husband—I sez to him this very mornin, that I didn't believe as how the boy had done it an—"

The four men carrying the dead upon a stretcher, were passing the door. The body was covered with a cloth, but one hand fell below its folds, and on that hand there sparkled a quaint hoop of twist gold, clasping a staropal that glittered in the sun.

The old woman saw it, her face grew gray. A maniac light leaped into her eyes, and tearing the cloth from the corpse she shrieked:

"My son! Mr Cyril!"

The men laid the burden at her feet. She knelt over it, tangled her fingers in the golden locks and pressed her lips upon the beautiful dumb lips of her dead boy.

Silence.
The landlady leaned forward with tears running down her face, and sobbed.

"Come with me, ma'am."

Silence.
"Ma'am do—do come with me."

A doctor stepped forward, lifted the bent brow and whispered lustily, "She is dead!"

I hate a mob with a hatred that burns in every atom of my sense and soul. It is Christless as it is cruel—cruel as it is cowardly. The raving devils who compose it are craven all. Not one of them dare meet single the victim of its wrath. Not one of them dare risk singly the consequences of its crimson crime.

Reidsville Weekly: The struggle is over, so far as Congress is concerned. The silver men have made a gallant fight.
They have a right to be proud of their course. The people will stand by them. Of this we have not the least doubt. They have stood firm against tremendous pressure brought to bear upon them.
Senator Vance gave some in-dea of it in his speech at the State fair in which he told how he had been begged and threatened and worked on by the lobbyists sent to Washington by the bankers and gold-bugs. With all the patronage at his disposal, greater than that of any ruler on earth, the President has not been able to carry his party with him. "You have dictated the terms to us," said Senator Gorman, an Administration leader, addressing John Sherman and his republican allies in the Senate last Saturday. A Democratic Administration led by John Sherman! What a humiliating confession for a democratic Senator to make!

Neatly Ten Centuries Old.

The Great Age of a Washed Ashore on the Pacific Coast.

The largest whale which ever entered this harbor, and one of the largest ever seen on this coast, washed ashore at Tokelund Monday, says the South Bend Herald. The news was immediately brought back by one of the morning steamers, and the afternoon passenger boats were crowded to their greatest capacity by the throngs who were anxious to see the monster.

The fish came in on high tide, and lies just below the bath house of Charles Fisher.
It was alive and kicking and did not finally surrender its lease on existence until Tuesday about noon. County Attorney M. D. Edgbert had taken along a tape line and carefully measured the monster. The line showed the extreme length of 174 feet and 8 inches, with a 'waist measure' of 161 feet and 6 inches.
County Surveyor L. C. Vickrey figured on the weight of the 'animal' and pronounced this member of the balenoiden family to weigh forty-seven and one-half tons, and the blubber and whale bone to be worth at current prices, oil, $9,795; bone $1,000; making a net total of $10,795.

Attorney L. E. Grinn attempted to compute the age of the subject under consideration, and concluded from the transverse lines on the baleen that this fish had existed for 986 years, lacking but fourteen years of having lived the longest term of whale life. The pectoral fins are twelve feet long and seven feet broad; the mouth is twenty-four feet long, the blow holes eighteen inches in length, and the half hundred bathers in the water at the time it came ashore say the noise of spouting was deafening and the spray ejected at least fifty feet in the air. The thrashing of the tail in the water in the struggle to regain the channel was heard at McGowan's cannery at the month of North River, four miles away. County School Superintendent L. W. Fans-cher furnished some historical facts in regard to the whale. Alfred the Great had been dead but six years when his whale-ship began to navigate the waters of the earth.
The old boy was 120 years old when William the Conqueror was born, and may have been playing off English shores when he was made king. He was on earth at the time of making the great charter at Runnameda, he was middle aged when the pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, and probably looked upon the wars of Napoleon, the American Revolution and Civil War with many a sad sigh and shake of the head for the ruthless slaughter of humanity.

Charlotte Observer: Twenty-seven years ago a lady moved away from Charlotte leaving a large wash pot which she owned in charge of a neighbor. The neighbor heard nothing of her after she left, until yesterday she wrote a postal asking that her wash-pot be shipped to her right away. She made no inquiry for any one of the family, all she was interested in was the pot. It was shipped her forthwith, with no extra charge for storage.

The President's Thanksgiving Proclamation.

President Cleveland last Friday issued the following Thanksgiving proclamation:

While the American people should every day remember the praise and thanksgiving the divine goodness and mercy which have followed them since their beginning as a nation, it is fitting that one day in each year should be devoted to the contemplation of the blessings we have received from the hand of God and to the grateful acknowledgment of His loving kindness.

Therefore I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 30th day of the present month of November, as a day of Thanksgiving and praise to be kept and observed by all the people of our land.
On that day let us forego our ordinary work and employment and assemble in our usual places of worship, where we may recall all that God has done for us, and where from grateful hearts our united tribute of praise and song may reach the Throne of Grace. Let the reunion of kindred and the social meeting of friends lend cheer and enjoyment to the day, and let generous gifts of charity for the relief of the poor and needy prove the sincerity of our thanksgiving.

Witness my hand and the seal of the United States, which I have caused to be hereto affixed.

Done at the City of Washington on the third day of November, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-three, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and eighteenth.

GROVER CLEVELAND,
By the President:
WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Secretary of State.

Landmark: Judge Richard Clark, of the Georgia Superior Court bench, has abandoned the practice of swearing jurors and witnesses on the Bible. Witnesses and jurors, when they are sworn in Judge Clark's court, simply raise their right hand. The departue is a commendable one. A witness intends swearing a lie will not be deterred by the fact that he has kissed a Bible. Further, this practice of kissing a Bible, which is kept in court and kissed by all classes and conditions of people—until it is slick with grease and filth—is dangerous to health and repugnant to the feelings of people who have a proper regard for cleanliness. The Superior Court judges of North Carolina would do well to emulate the example of Judge Clark.

WOMAN'S WORK AT HOME.

A man in New York who never heard the song of "Old Grumble" asked his wife how she occupied herself during the day. As to the housework and domestic duties the man declared it would take him about a half hour daily to perform it all. The young woman writes to a newspaper for advice as to how she is to convince her husband that her life is not a primrose path of dalliance.
She explains that she has three children to take care of, the oldest four years old and the youngest eight months old; six rooms to clean and arrange, besides general housework, washing and ironing and sewing for the family. The woman is of the opinion that her husband could not do all this in half an hour. "Old Grumble, and his wife lived in the country.
Mrs. Grumble had no children to mind, but she had various other live animals which were nearly as troublesome, and when Mr. Grumble declared that he could do more work in a day than his wife could do in three, she quietly assented and went to the field to plow, leaving the old man to perform her work.
He first went to milk the cow but she would not stand still and finally kicked the pail over and spilled all the milk.
Then he fed the pigs and struck his head against the beams and the hair began to fly. He forgot the fat on the flames. He went to wind the bobbin and forgot the old speckled hen and she laid astray. After many other misadventures he began to look up at the sun, thinking that it was a very long day and his wife would never come.
She came at last, however, and when her weary and depressed spouse told her all his trouble she gave him no other sympathy than the expression of the wish that it had been double. The result of the experiment was that Mr. Grumble vowed by all the stars in heaven that his wife could do more work in a day than he could in seven. This is a valuable suggestion to the young woman in N. Y. If she would go out one day and leave the partner of her joys and sorrows to nurse the baby he would probably arrive at Mr. Grumble's conclusion.—Baltimore Sun.

If a proper recognition of silver and a material reduction of the tariff are not secured during this administration, a union of the South and West will not be difficult to effect. Such an alliance may bring about results that will cause gnashing of teeth on Wall street. Those of the Sherman law may not have reckoned the cost of the accomplishment of that end.
It is all well enough if a substitute is supplied, otherwise who can foretell the result?
One possibility that hovers ghost-like over the maybe grave of silver is alarming to behold. May we never come to witness reality to which it seems to beckon us on.—Lincoln Democrat.
