

THE ARIZONIAN.

Poetical Selections.

Let Fate do her worst, there are relics of joy Bright dreams of the past that she cannot destroy, That come in the night time of sorrow and care,
And bring back the features that joy used to wear.

Long, long be my heart with such memories filled, Like the vase in which roses have once been distilled; You may break, you may shatter the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

No thief e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law.
Green be the turf above thee, Friend of my better days, None know thee but to love thee, None named thee but to praise.

Fall many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear, Fall many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air.

Don't You Do It.—When you are offered a great bargain, the value of which you know nothing about, but which you are to get at half price, "because it is you,"—don't you do it.

When some married woman offers slyly to get up a flirtation with you, and would no doubt do a great deal more—don't you do it.

When a horse kicks or bites you, and you feel a strong inclination to take a club and knock the creature down—don't you do it.

When some scheming mother tries to make a match between you and her proud, ignorant, flashy daughter—don't you do it.

When in some business operation you see an opportunity of making something extra by a little trifle of dishonesty—don't you do it.

If on some occasion you should go home a little top heavy and your wife should hear you, and say "Do tumble over the table and break your neck"—don't you do it.

When your wife urges you to buy a piano, because the Smiths have one—don't you do it.

When you go into a parlor and find a young lady and gentleman in close conversation and they tell you to take a seat—don't you do it.

When some hungry lawyer says you have a clear case against your neighbor, and advises you to sue—don't you do it.

When you are tempted to get mad and swear at some trifling thing—don't you do it.

THE RIFLE CANNON.—The new cannons, which have just been substituted for the old material in the French army, are all rifled. The calibres are but two, calibre of 12 for a siege; calibre of 4 for field guns. The solid ball is suppressed, all projectiles are hollow. They strike as a solid ball, and burst like shells. Their shape is conical; they are provided with lead projections, which enter the grooves inside the cannon, and insure a great precision in firing.

The cannon 12 tells more against fortifications than the enormous calibre tried in England.— They have been tried as follows: two similar heavy blocks of masonry having been chosen, a battery of 25 (old plan) was mounted before the first at 36 yards, the usual distance for making a breach. A battery 12, new plan, was placed before the other at about double that distance, namely, 77 yards. It required half the number of shots from the new cannon to make as wide a breach as was made by the old one. The balls entered the masonry 32 inches deep, and then exploded, throwing off large cones. The charge of the new cannon was 2 lbs. 10 ounces of powder; the charge of the old one was 18 lbs.

The superiority of the field piece is still more marked: it weighs less than 600 lbs., and six men can carry it on their shoulders through a difficult defile. It requires only 1 lb. of powder, and sends a ball 4,400 yards with such exact-ness that it is easy to hit a single horseman at 3,300 yards. The explosive power of these balls is enormous, as was lately exhibited by the death of Gen. Ardent. This officer was watching the experiments through a horizontal long hole 1-16th of an inch high, at a distance of 66 yards from the place where the ball burst. A particle of iron extremely small struck him sufficiently hard to break his skull and to cause instant death. From the above description, we are inclined to think that Olin's experiments have not been lost on the French government, and that they must charge their hollow balls with something quicker than common powder.
They use either fulminating or cotton powder.

The customers of a certain cooper in a town out west, caused him a vast deal of vexation by their raving habits and persistence in getting all their old tubs and casks repaired, and buying but little new work. "I stood it, however," said he, "until one day old Sam Crabtree bro't in an old 'bung-hole' to which he said he wanted a new barrel made. Then I quitted the business in disgust."

A WONDERFUL MAN.—The Count of St. Germain, is in some respects, the most wonderful man in the world. Any newspaper he reads once he knows by memory, and has such gigantic comprehensive power of numbering that he retains a series of a thousand numbers which he can recite forward, backward, or from the middle. From the court of Henry III at Crakow, he demanded one hundred packs of picked cards, mixed them together in disorder, let him tell all the succession of the cards, ordered to be noted down exactly, and repeated their following one after the other, without being wrong once.

He plays almost every musical instrument of the world, is a fine painter, and imitates any handwriting in the most illusive manner. He has but one passion, playing all games with absolute mastery. In faro, monte, or any game of chance, he is sure to break the bank.

ONLY ONE O'CLOCK.—Mr. Bowers coming home late one night from "a business engagement," was met at the door by his wife.

"Pretty time to come home, Mr. Bowers, a nice time, three o'clock in the morning; you, a respectable man in the community, and the father of a family."

"Tisn't three—it's only one, I heard the clock strike as I came around the corner; council always sits till one o'clock."

"My stars! Mr. Bowers, you're drunk. It's three in the morning."

"I say 'tain't it's only one, I heard it strike one, as I came round the corner; heard it strike one, two or three times." Mrs Bowers was satisfied.

Assaying in a manner to give satisfaction to all who all the business entrusted to them in a manner to please their depositors, they feel at liberty to refer to the correctness and liberality which have characterized all their dealings as some guarantee for what they will do in the future.

They would especially dwell upon the fact that THEY DO THEIR OWN WORK, and manufacture all utensils used by them, for which they received a premium at the late State Fair. In every department none but the best of talent is employed.

As vouchers for the correctness of their Assays,
