WINDMILL MADE INTO CHURCH. Novel House of God That Serves for Small Congregation in England.

Twelve years ago, when the villagers living on the border of Reigate heath, Surrey, England, had no place of worship nearer than the parish church, a service was held in a schoolroom close by and was so well attended that the authorities looked around for a suitable permanent building.

The erection of a church was out of the question, but there stood on the heath the remains of an old mill, a picturesque feature in a beautiful bit of landscape. Inspection showed that once the rats were got rid of a comparatively small outlay would furnish and render the mill fit for public worship.

The interior of the chapel arouses interest. Four buttresses, four feet thick by six feet in height, serve as rests for two massive beams which cross each other in the center and support an upright shaft cranked with age and strongly bound with iron bands. The buttresses make four natural alcoves. The entrance door stands in one, and immediately opposite is the landing. The harmonium is placed in a third, and the belfry sits close beside it and rings his bell; the fourth is occupied by the congregation. The rent of this novel church is only 25 cents a year.
