CRIMINAL SUPERIOR COURT OPENS. Only One Prisoner Pleaded Guilty—Several Pleas of Not Guilty and Nolles Entered in Cases—Many Young Women as Witnesses—Jury Comes in Today.

The criminal term of the superior court opened here at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon with Judge Reed on the bench. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. J. Smith. There was a large number in attendance at the session, the court room being filled. Among the number were several women and about twenty young women who have been summoned in connection with the Hill and Babson cases.

There are 23 new cases and 15 continued cases on the docket, and the prisoners' pen contains many young men at this session, a number much younger than usual. There are 10 men under arrest, while others are less than 30 and most of them just past 21. The young women witnesses in the Hill and Babson cases, ranging from 16 to 30 in age, were given a room by themselves after their attendance was noted. They made light of the situation and had an ice cream during the afternoon in which they seemed to enjoy themselves and their position and apparently little concerned by the situation and the revolting character of the case with which they are connected.

George R. Haynes of Lebanon pleaded guilty to the theft of $40 in cash from Martha W. Berhaus on Nov. 4, 1909. State Attorney Hull thought the fellow had been unfortunate, but he received a lesson from his arrest. Attorney Huntington spoke for him and Judge Reed fined him $10 and costs.

In the case against Charles Flanagan and Holden Wilson, two boys, of Waterbury, nolles on terms were entered. State Attorney Hull stated that the boys went to Mason's Island to camp, one of the boy's father owned a cottage there. They entered the Wilson cottage had been entered and they went into others, getting cooking utensils, clothes and a rifle, intending to return them. He accused a boyish prank and without criminal intent. They are bright appearing boys and relatives were in the court room.

Charles W. Coburn of 17 Billingham avenue, Belmont, Mass., employed as superintendent of the construction company, of 127 Federal street, Boston, was struck and almost instantly killed Monday morning by a New London Tuesday morning by the depot yard switcher of the New York and Norwich. Coburn was about 58 years of age. He had been living temporarily at Montville, where he was superintending the erection of a mill for the Unceas Paper company.

Coburn's body was terribly lacerated. Identification was made by the arrival in New London at 11:40 o'clock from Boston of L. M. Harriman, a member of the firm. Coburn came to New London about 11 o'clock from Montville for the purpose of securing purchases, making the trip in the company's launch. He alighted at the public landing and went to the market of the G. M. Long Co. A few minutes later Mr. Coburn was struck by the switcher, which was on the tracks. At the same time the train arriving in New London from Norwich at 11:10 o'clock was backing to track No. 8, the third track from the station platform.

Just as the passenger train was about to come to a stop, Coburn stepped to the rails on which the switch engine and cars were approaching him, he then being about 60 feet east of the crossing. The switcher slowly crept upon him. He was struck by the breast beam and felled across the rails, the engine only passing across about two feet from the body.

Neither Engineer Gatchell nor members of the engine crew were aware of the accident. Coburn sustained a fracture of the skull extending from the top of the head to the base of the skull, besides a laceration of one hand and the severing of both legs. Identification was hard to make because of facial bruises and cuts, but with the search of a portion of the clothing several letters bearing the name of Coburn were found and a resident of Montville was found positive the victim was Coburn.

Coburn's death is the first to occur during the daytime at this crossing since the erection of the present station. PRINCIPALS' CLUBS MEETS. Paper on eGeography and Resignation of Secretary Brown.
