

THE MOSKILL THROWN INTO WELL

Young Woman Tells Her Story in the Superior Court at Bridgeport.

HUSBAND AND HIS PAL ARRAIGNED.

Pleaded Not Guilty to Charges of Robbery, Assault and Attempt to Murder—Relates How She Came to Marry Joseph Morak—Why Morak Refused to Marry Her in Chicopee—All Night Experience in the Well Standing in Her Stocking Feet on a Ledge of Ice.

Bridgeport, Conn., Feb. 17.—In the superior court here today Annie Moskkill told the story of her marriage to Joseph Morak and how the latter, assisted by Bartoni Lasaki, threw her into a well on the Perry farm in Fairfield on the night of Jan. 15 and left her, as they supposed, dead. The two men were arraigned at the opening of court and pleaded not guilty to the three charges preferred against them, robbery and conspiracy to rob, assault and robbery, and attempt to murder.

Met Morak at Friend's House.

The Moskkill woman said she was born in Austria, Poland 25 years ago and came to New Bedford, Mass., when she was 19 years old. She had lived since her arrival in this country in Boston, Salem and Chicopee, where for three years she was domestic. She met Morak about two months before last Christmas at a friend's home, where he had come to see her about some money that had been stolen from her by Joseph Polinski of Indian Orchard. She went to Indian Orchard with Morak, she said, to point out to him the house in which she lived.

He Proposed Marriage.

Two weeks after their visit to Indian Orchard Morak called at her place of employment and proposed marriage to her, showing her a letter from his mother in the old country in which she said she had been left a farm and that she wanted him to come home and settle down. She believed what was in the letter, she said, and agreed to marry him.

Morak Couldn't Find Suitable Place to Get Married.

They went to Boston to get married, but on their arrival there he said he didn't like the place and they went to Lynn. When they got to Lynn he didn't marry in Chicopee, he said he had had a man a hundred dollars that he wouldn't get married there. In Lynn they were married by D. J. Murphy, a justice of the peace. After the wedding they had their pictures taken, Lasaki accompanying them. From the time of their first meeting the girl paid all the expenses of the funeral, including the marriage license fee. After the wedding she returned to Chicopee and packed her belongings and drew her money from the bank. On Friday she took the Superior and met the two men. They told her to buy tickets for Bridgeport, where Lasaki said he had a cousin from whom he wished to get money. They reached there at 12 o'clock Saturday morning and left her in the station until 4 in the evening, when they took her on the 8:17 train to Fairfield.

The Crime Committed.

On reaching Fairfield, she said they walked her across the country through snow up to her knees and in reply to her questions as to where they were taking her she was told "just over the hill." When in sight of the Perry house she said Morak asked her to accompany her to the ground, calling to Lasaki to come and help him. They choked her and squeezed her so tightly, she said, that she couldn't remember being thrown into the well and seemed to wake up to find herself choking in the water and find herself in a hole with brick all around her. She choked up, she said, and saw the men looking down at her and then they threw her bag, hat, muff and umbrella and a lot of snow down on top of her.

Found in Well by Farmer.

Affraid to cry out, she didn't call for help until she heard them go away. She tried to climb up the sides of the well, but she shoes were so slippery that she could not get a foothold and she sank deeper. She said she was unable to raise herself, so she stood all through the night in her stocking feet on a ledge of ice. On Sunday morning the Perrys found her and took her out.

Polish Pastor a Witness.

At this point the woman's testimony was stopped and Rev. Ladislav Kielbasinski, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Indian Orchard, testified that he had identified Morak as a man he had married to Catherine Zydzycioz on Feb. 11, 1909, under the name of John Bankowski. A dramatic touch was given to his testimony when he identified the woman among the spectators in the court room and a companion of the bride as the bridesmaid at the wedding.

Finally Settled on Hartford.

On Jan. 12 they met in Springfield, going to Hartford the following day, where they were married by D. J. Murphy, a justice of the peace. After the wedding they had their pictures taken, Lasaki accompanying them. From the time of their first meeting

WITNESS JAMES R. KEENE COULD NOT REMEMBER.

Manager of Collapsed Hocking Pool Again on the Stand.

New York, Feb. 17.—There were indications of bad faith among members of the pool, regrets for a "moment of weakness" in which profits of $250,000 were "overlooked," and many courtiers but he informed the jury that he stood again to explain his management of the collapsed Columbus and Hocking pool.

Mr. Keene's proofs proved too blind for counsel for the receiver, and too blind for him. There were entries showing purchases and sales, but nothing to show for whose account, nor could Mr. Keene remember.

Efforts were made to get Mr. Keene to admit that he was the pool owner. Entries seemed to show that he was 2,700 shares short of the pool on the day when it collapsed, but it could not be proved by the books. "I would like to get an understandable transcript of your books," Mr. Keene said.

"I should be gratified for you to have it," he said. "I am willing to let you see them, but I am not willing to let you have them." Mr. Keene reiterated his conviction that the second pool ought never to have been formed, and added that, even after it had been formed, he would have sold it out at 60 with a profit of $250,000 for the members, "but they wanted more stock," he said, "and didn't seem to care for it."

His better judgment was overruled, and that he added, "was a moment of weakness." The contradiction between this statement and his previous assertion that the stock would have gone to 100, "if everybody had kept faith," was not explained.

After the pool had been distributed, did you tell anyone that you had sold your individual holdings? "I never tell anyone my business," asserted Mr. Keene, with emphasis. He received no commutation for his service, he said, other than what he made on the pool in common with other members.

"NIGHT RIDERS" INDICTED AT COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.

One of the Men is a Member of the State Legislature.

Washington, Feb. 17.—Twelve so-called "night riders" have been indicted by the federal grand jury at Covington, Ky., for acts perpetrated in a northern Kentucky tobacco district constituting a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade, according to information received by the department of justice today from Edwin P. Groves, one of the assistants to Wade H. Ellis, who has been supervising the investigation into the alleged outrages against independent tobacco growers. The offense on which these indictments are based is characterized as one of the most literal examples of restraint of interstate trade ever come to the attention of the department.

It occurred at Dry Ridge, a station on the Cincinnati Southern railway. An independent tobacco grower took to the station a shipment destined for a Cincinnati warehouse and left it with the agent after receiving a bill of lading. The grower, however, was unable to dissuade both the shipper and the agent from sending the tobacco, but being unsuccessful, compelled the owner to sign up a bill of lading. They then went to the agent and got the tobacco.

The men indicted are John S. Steers, a member of the Kentucky legislature, Henry Simpson, a Gas Wagon driver, S. Carter, Hugh L. Conrad, Frank K. Conrad, R. L. Conrad, John W. Colander, John Caldwell, William Mulligan, Martin Bennett, and James H. Carter. Two counts of the indictment are for conspiracy in restraint of trade and one for combination.

Juneau, Alaska, Feb. 17.—The steel steamship Yucatan of the Alaska Steamship company, formerly a yacht owned by George W. P. Porter of New York, bound from Valdez to Seattle, with 51 passengers, struck an iceberg in icy Strait yesterday and sank within eight minutes in six fathoms of water. There was no loss of life, and so far as is known no one was injured.

The Yucatan was bound for Chichagof Island to take on a cargo of gypsum. When the water was reached the water was smooth but there were great fields of ice. Snow was falling so thickly that it was impossible to see far ahead.

The Yucatan was struck by the iceberg on the bridge with the pilot, Captain John Johnson, who commanded the steamship Ohio when she was lost in British Columbian waters last summer. Johnson's death was ordered by the steamer crew through the ice.

Presently an iceberg loomed up ahead and the Yucatan was struck. A great hole being torn in the side of the vessel.

Full steam ahead was ordered, and the Yucatan was beached on the island. The boats were lowered and all on board were taken ashore without mishap. The ten women passengers were taken off first. Food and bedding were sent to the island.

On the island the castaways found cabins, and with sufficient food, clothing, blankets and wood, are not likely to suffer. Many passengers lost their personal effects.

A steamer arrived at the bridge at 5:30 o'clock and the watchman opened the draw for it to pass, but as a train was due at six o'clock he hastened up the track to place a warning signal.
