A. J. Brown, the executor named in the will, his attorney Samuel B. Harvey and Attorney W. A. King and E. J. Kelley were present, however, before Judge Shea and after considering the matter for quite a while it was at last found that an agreement could not be arrived at. Attorney King announced that his clients, the widow and children of the deceased would then offer evidence against the admission of the will, unless the same was admitted by the court.
