A conductor on the local trolley line related a somewhat unusual experience on Saturday in telling of an envelope that came to him containing three one-cent stamps.

The letter was post-marked Cambridge, Mass., and was from a woman passenger who had ridden on his car five or six days before and had found that she had only four pennies when it came time to pay the fare. When the conductor accommodated by supplying the extra cent himself and ringing up the fare she thanked him and said she would surely repay the penny. Now he knows that she had one scrupulously honest passenger who had a penny earned interest on a bad one.
