

FATAL ACCIDENT NEAR WESTERLY

James Farrell, of Woonsocket, Dies as Result of Injuries Received in Attempt to Jump a Freight—Nine Applications for License Up to Friday Afternoon—Local Man Wins Manhattan Bride.

Although the $200 license fee fixed by the town council was considered excessive by many, the indications are that more than seventeen applications for liquor licenses will be received, the maximum number to which the town of Westerly is entitled under the law.

Up to 5 o'clock Friday afternoon the town clerk had received nine applications for liquor licenses, as follows: Sullivan Joseph Bookstaus, 52 Pleasant street; Antonio Lovello, 71 Pierce street; Alphonso Aceto, 73 Pleasant street; Giuseppe Turano, 57 Pleasant street; Francesco Turisi, 87 Pleasant street; Luigi Murano, 70 Oak street; Michael McCarthy, White Rock road; Frank Holiday, 157 Granite street; Joseph Rechia, in store to be erected near 78 Granite street.

Besides Auctioneer Eugene B. Pagdieten, only two persons attended the mortgage sale of the building lot on Pearl street that belonged to the estate of John H. Noka, Friday afternoon. They were Irvine Chester, who held the mortgage, which with unpaid interest and taxes amounted to $155, and William E. Cook, the latter stating that he came as a spectator and not as a prospective purchaser.

The auctioneer started the sale at 10 and Mr. Chester raised the bid $20. The lot was bought by Mr. Cook and he raised the bid, and by small bids the amount was increased to $185, with Mr. Cook as the purchaser.

In attempting to board a west bound local freight shortly after 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, James Farrell, about forty-five years of age, whose home is in Woonsocket, made a mistake and was perhaps fatally injured. He left a restaurant in Railroad avenue and ran to the railroad crossing to board the morning train. He seized the hand rail of one of the freight cars, but missed the step, and was dragged a short distance, which caused a fracture of his right foot, crushing it into the ankle. He then fell beside the track near the bridge that crosses the Pawtucket river, about 250 feet from the crossing. The train was stopped and the injured man was taken on a stretcher to the baggage room, and Dr. Scanlon gave him every possible medical attention to relieve his suffering. The man was unconscious when picked up, but became conscious after reaching the baggage room. He said his name was James Farrell, his home Woonsocket and that his mother's name was Margaret J. Farrell. He said he was a Catholic and that he had been summoned by Rev. Father Dunn, who was summoned and the injured man was attended, and as his talk was rambling that the council should do all that could be done for his spiritual welfare.

Dr. Scanlon, after agreeing with Dr. Champlin, to care for the man and without expense to the town of Westerly, made an effort to have Farrell taken to the Westerly hospital, a private institution, at the expense of the town. Communication was had with Mr. E. S. Barber, overseer of the poor, and after considerable haggling with that officer, after a delay of an hour and a half, the injured man was removed to the hospital.

Mr. Barber suggested sending Farrell to his home in Woonsocket, but when told that the man would probably die before reaching there, Mr. Barber consented to permit the man to be taken to the hospital, upon condition that the expense would not exceed $25. Dr. Scanlon got into communication with William E. Cook, president of the town council, and he said that proper care should be given the injured man and that he would recommend that the council sanction any action that might be taken in the matter. During the haggling process, Mr. Barber stated that he was informed that the man was injured when on the Pawtucket end of the bridge, and that therefore it was up to the town of Stonington to care for the case. All this time the unfortunate man was growing weaker and in urgent need of hospital treatment. Besides the right side of his right foot, Farrell's right arm, hand and wrist were broken, and a deep cut in the left side of the head, besides many minor cuts and bruises. At the hospital careful examination was made. Farrell's injuries, in addition to the loss of the right foot, it was found that the right arm was so severely fractured and lacerated that amputation was necessary, and the arm was taken off above the elbow. His skull was fractured. He died at 3:30 p. m. Farrell's mother had not been located by the Woonsocket police.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

An Approval. Mr. Editor: Perusing through your columns to express my approval of the earnest work of Editor Treason of St. Patrick's church against the vice of gambling. Following so closely upon the warning given by Judge Cook of New London and your editorial endorsement of the same, it may denote a stirring of the civic conscience which only needs stimulus pending to produce results.

Manifestly the public policy demanded in this matter is one that shall reach the patron as well as the keeper of a den—that shall lessen the business by cutting off the supply. Is it not worth a moment's thought?
