PAINTING GOES TO URUGUAYAN GOVERNMENT. Work of G. A. Thompson of Norwich Art School One of Three Selected.

Down in South America the fame of the Quinipiac river of this state has been spread by means of a painting called "Nocturne—The Quinipiac," depicting a scene on the sleepy river and painted by George Albert Thompson, formerly of New Haven, director of the Norwich art school. The painting possesses the distinction, too, of introducing to the Uruguayan people the first example of American art ever seen in the national gallery of that country.

The purchase by the government of Mr. Thompson's painting is considered a great honor, inasmuch as the government bought only two other American paintings, The Spirit of Ancient Art, by Philip Hall of Boston, and Early Spring, by W. Elmer Schollkopf, a Philadelphia painter.

About a year ago the American pictures were selected by jury to be sent to the international exhibitions at Buenos Ayres and Santiago de Chile, where some few were sold. Later they were sent to Montevideo.
