Sudden Death At East Great Plain Wallace Bain Taken Sick With Heart Trouble on Roof of Charles Brown's House and Died as Soon as Taken Down.

Wallace Bain died suddenly at the home of Charles Brown at East Great Plain, near the Starr farm, on Tuesday afternoon shortly after 2:30 o'clock. For some time, Mr. Bain has been employed by Mr. Brown at this place, and on Tuesday he came there to do some scraping of the building preparatory to painting it, where it had been broken up by a chimney fire. Mr. Bain was lying on the roof. Investigating, he found that he was in a serious condition, and called men employed in his job to help get Mr. Bain to the ground. The roof where he was lying is of a gentle slope, but he had gotten his feet in a gutter, which probably kept him from falling. Mr. Brown saw that his condition was serious and he was taken down as gently as possible, but expired a few minutes afterwards without regaining consciousness, though efforts to arouse him were made by Dr. R. W. Kimball, medical Examiner Dr. R. W. Kimball was called and investigated the affair. His decision was that Mr. Bain had died from heart trouble and the effects of the hot weather.

CONDEMNATION HEARING ON PALMER FARM.

The continued hearing in chambers before Judge Shumway of the condemnation proceedings of the board of water commissioners against J. Raymond Palmer of Montville was begun in the superior court here on Tuesday morning and will be continued this morning. The witnesses for the board are J. H. Palmer, J. R. May, and King appear for Mr. Palmer. The land owned by Mr. Palmer forms the basin of the reservoir which is being built on the property known as Palmer farm in Montville. Attorney Fanning told the court that the question of title to the property may have to be decided by the court. The will of Elsie Palmer, who died 20 years ago, a life interest was left to his wife. There were two witnesses to the will. Land had been bought from Lucy Palmer Giddings, a daughter, and a claim to a right in the estate is made by W. H. Palmer of Berlin, Md. The will is void the title of Mr. and Mrs. J. Raymond Palmer and the others will be affected. Attorney Constock said he could see no trouble ahead about the title. Mrs. Palmer died in 1897 and the property was divided satisfactorily to all according to the will. The question of the water and witnesses were called regarding that. S. E. Palmer, engineer of the water board, showed a plan of the farm and explained the location of the 118 1-2 acres which make up the farm. The Giddings property includes 49 1-2 acres. J. L. Case when called said he considered the farm worth $2,500, and the value fixed on it by W. H. Palmer was $2,250. J. R. May of New London said the property is rough and billy and the value of $18 an acre was fixed by E. A. Prentice, which made the farm worth in his opinion $2,128.50. Nicholas Tarrant said he had sold real estate for 15 years, and in his opinion the farm is worth $2,200. There was a discussion between him and Attorney Constock about 200 cords of hickory timber on the land. A. L. Potter testified that the farm is worth no more than $2,500 and that the wood on it is not worth over $500 or 50 cents a cord. Engineer Palmer again made an explanation of the map and told of the water rights. After the hearing, copies of the deeds would be put in with other papers, Attorney Fanning stated that his side rested. Raymond Palmer, the first witness called by Attorney Constock, and he said he had 140 acres of land. He said he did not understand the land when asked to explain his boundaries. He did not fix a value on the property. William Richards, superintendent of the New London Water department was called and testified he fixed a value of $25 an acre on the wood land and $10 an acre on the other land. The house he valued at $250 and the barn at $50, the total according to his figuring is $7,250. He said he had been buying it he would have tried to get it as low as possible. He should consider his figure a fair market value considering the city had decided to take it for a reservoir. He would not offer his fair price if he knew the city had not decided to take it. He made up his mind on these figures because the city of Norwich had decided to take it for reservoir purposes and took in consideration its value for a reservoir. It is understood that Mr. Palmer would sell for $250 an acre, but was willing to compromise for $6,000. The city, it is understood, had offered $3,600 to avoid litigation, although ten months ago it had an option on it for $1,950.

Aerial Law.

England has succeeded Germany among European lands in legislating on aerial navigation. Germany prohibits any airplane from running on any pretext over a city, town or village and the police closely supervise flights over open country.

The English parliament had first before it a bill imposing heavy penalties on anyone who allowed any aircraft "recklessly, negligently or in a manner which is dangerous to the public." Discussion showed that this regulation was not enough. The penalty, however heavy, would come only after an airplane had dropped on a roof or in the street.
